Much Mystery Over German War Chest.

Little Known of Julius Tower, at Spandau, Where $30,000,000 is Kept.—A Heavy Guard Kept About It.—Only One Attempt at Robbery, and the Robber Broke His Neck.

(New York Sun.)

The report from Berlin that the German Government in the course of its new war programme plans to triple the treasure it has stored away in the famous Julius Tower at Spandau has caused a revival of the speculation regarding this great secret hoard of 120,000,000 marks ($30,000,000), which will now be increased to $90,000,000.

More or less mystery has always surrounded the Julius Tower. The mere mention in Baedeker that "the imperial military reserve fund of six million sterling is kept in the Julius Thurm of the citadel" of Spandau, which is only eight miles from Berlin, has excited the curiosity of most every foreign visitor in the German capital. But sightseers are not welcome within the fortifications of Spandau, and there is record of but one American who ever caught a glimpse of the interior of the tower.

An officer of the German reserve, who at one time was stationed in the fortress of Spandau, but who is now living in this country, told the "Sun" something about the tower and the treasure it holds.

The tower itself is not impressive. It stands in the midst of the citadel surrounded by barracks and officers' quarters, and is not far from the great arsenal and the manufacturing of war implements. Directly about it is a small cleared square, which gives just enough room for the movements of the small company which does guard duty there. The tower is cylindrical, and is built of heavy masonry, with nothing to relieve its massive effect. It rises about thirty-five or forty feet from the ground, and is almost as thick through as it is tall.

Entrance to the tower is made through triple steel doors, each guarded by a system of "simultaneous keys" held by different individuals, and by a constantly changing band of sentries. One set of keys is with the Chancellor of the Empire and the other with the president of the committee for the debts of the empire. The local guardian of the treasure was made curator by a decree of 1874, under orders from the Chancellor.

The gold that makes up this "Reichskriegsschatz" is in twenty franc pieces, the very same that were paid as the French war indemnity. The gold coin is stored away in bags in a dozen small cabinets or safes built into the walls. These are on various levels and are reached by a spiral staircase.

Twenty-four men usually compose the guard. Of these eight are continually on duty, the guard changing every two hours. The patrol is made about the base of the Tower, within the Tower, and on the top.

Once a year the amount of the gold is certified by an official reckoning. The coins are not counted. Instead the gold is weighed in bulk, and minute fractional differences due to dampness and other atmospheric conditions are noted.

The amount of gold in the Julius Tower has never varied, and there has been but one attempt at robbery. This was by a drunken cobbler of Spandau, who in some mysterious way, according to the story, managed to get by the guards. When he was half way he fell and broke his neck. Mr. Robert W. Poindexter, of Los Angeles is the American who got into trouble with the Spandau authorities because he got too near the German treasure.

Mr. Poindexter told the sentinel that he wanted to see the commandant, and marched into the tower while the soldier's back was turned. He was detained until the police could be summoned, and then taken before the authorities, whom he had difficulty in convincing of his purpose.

The Julius Tower was first used by Frederick the Great, as the Prussian "war chest." The reserve held there was turned over to the empire when it was founded, and the tower itself used for the storage of the $30,000,000, the small fraction of the billion dollar indemnity paid by France. The money has been kept in reserve to defray the expenses of the quick mobilization of the German war army in case war should break out. It would pay for the horses and military supplies, which are already contracted for in such an emergency. It has been figured that the present $30,000,000 would be exhausted in a day and a half in case a war was declared.

Spandau is an island at the confluence of the Spree and the Havel Rivers. A greater part of it is made land.

The Increased Cost of Living.

Education Has Much to do With It. Trade Goods.

London, May 31.—The proposed revision of the freight rates by various railway companies in England has again drawn attention to the increased cost of living. Several papers publish schedules showing that while foodstuffs have risen from 20 to 30 per cent. in the last fifteen years, luxuries in the common sort have depreciated in value. All writers are agreed, however, that after a large successful strike the cost of living has always measurably risen.

On the other hand, trade has been particularly good in recent years, and the workman has benefited thereby, but not in the old way of saving up for a rainy day. His standard of living has been raised; what were formerly luxuries are now necessities, and the former, in the shape of dress, house decorations, and amusements, were never so cheap as they are now. The inclination to thrift is further discounted on account of the old-age pensions and the national insurance. There is a general faith that to-morrow will take care of itself.

Education has much to do with the altered conditions. Elevated taste means added expenditure, and a readjustment is to be looked for, not perhaps, so much in economies in existing outlays as in the higher earnings of all classes.
