The Russian situation (which may vet improve from within) is more than offset by the Italian successes which have evidently been more considerable than the cables have suggested. The Scientific American said pertinently, before the recent great victory had been won: "Another hope is due to the present conditions in Austria. It is known that her strength is dropping so rapidly that no great number of reinforcements can be drawn from the eastern front to produce material results on the Italian frontier. It is believed that this will be shown as soon as another forward movement of the Italian forces on the Carso front is begun." It has been shown, not alone by the suc cess attendant upon that forward vement, but also by the forced lev s upon Poland.
