Wounded Soldiers Given Place of Honor--Russian Elements Uniting for Common Good--Valparaiso Suffers from Hurricane.

GREAT VICTORY PARADE.

PARIS, July 14. The conquerors in the great war marched to-day in a victory parade under the Arc de Triomphe, through which only victors may pass. Picked units and individual heroes represented each of the Allied armies. Several million grateful persons, mostly French, but with many thousands of their Allies, struggled forward along the line of march for an opportunity to wave and shout their gratitude to them who saved them from German imperialism. The great triumphal arch, conceived by Napoleon to commemorate his victory at the battle of Austerlitz, took on new historic importance, when the Allies marched through the massive pile of masonry which dominated all Paris and moved down the Champs Elyses toward the Place de la Concorde. The place of honor in the procession was not accorded to the Generals and the smartly equipped troops, it was given to the thousand mutilated soldiers who passed under the arch and in front of the reviewing stand where stood President Poincare, moving haltingly and out of step as best they could. Many were injured, some were blinded some were in wheel chairs and others were on crutches or limped along with or without canes. Few of them were in uniform. They represented all the provinces of France, all the branches of the military service and all walks of life, as was indicated by the variety of their civilian attire. They made no effort to maintain military formation but marched as well as they could to the air played by the military band which followed them. Great crowds filled every inch in the streets and boulevards that commanded a view of the line of march. Windows were packed and roofs were black with people. Many hung in trees which lined the boulevards.

RAPIDLY GETTING NORMAL.

NEW YORK, July 14. Great Britain and France are rapidly getting back to a pre-war basis in industry, according to W. A. Eken-gren, Swedish Minister to the United States, who arrived here to-day with his wife aboard the steamship Stockholm, after visiting both countries. "This transition," he said, "probably will take more than a year, but judging the future by the present, surprising results may be expected in many lines. France already has resumed operations in a normal manner. This applies particularly in toys and dyes in which Germany held a monopoly before the war."

BIG STRIKE CALLED.

NEW YORK, July 14. The threatened strike of men employed on the vessels controlled by the United States Shipping Board was called for to-day. By this action, according to union officials 50,000 seamen and thousands of stewards and cooks and other employees joined the ranks of those already on strike in the coastwise trade. The offer of the shipping board of an increase in wages and shorter working hours in port was duplicated to-day by the American Steamship Association which controls seventy-five per cent. of the coastwise shipping but the proposals failed to bring about a settlement.

RUSSIA UNITING.

OMSK, July 3. Admiral Kolchak, the head of the All Russian Government replied to-day to the message from General Denikine the anti-Bolshevik leader in southern Russia in which the southern leader pledged his support of the Omsk government. In his telegram Admiral Kolchak said: "I am deeply touched by the patriotic decision dictated by your high ideals of duty to the country in the period of the disintegrating, general depression and pessimism you were one of the first to raise the standard of united, resurrected Russia. By your decision at the present moment you give the country their example of soldier and citizen who considers above all the happiness of his country and her historical future. God help you in your service to Russia."

DAMAGE CAUSED BY HURRICANE.

VALPARAISO, July 14. Five small vessels were destroyed or driven ashore and heavy damage was caused by a hurricane which blew over this port Saturday and Sunday. All but one of the crew of the German steamer Sals were drowned. The Sals was washed ashore and destroyed.

Dried Fish.

Considering the dried fish situation from its various angles, there appears to be no reason for any undue apprehension on the part of the shippers for the immediate future. While supplies have been fairly liberal, the demand has been generally well maintained and there is in prospect large business with many places which heretofore have not been calculated as more than possibilities. The effect of weather conditions to the eastward have delayed during operations somewhat, and very naturally there has been also some delay in shipments. This, however, has not been a bad thing for the export business in dried fish, for several tropical markets are or have been overstocked and delays in shipments from Gloucester in particular, allow time for a cleaning up at these places before new supplies are received. This would have a tendency toward stabilizing these markets for new fish. There is a fair supply of old fish on hand but it is not in any sense a heavy carryover. The spring fishery at Lunenburg, which has been in doubt, is estimated at about 50,000 quintals, which is a good catch. According to advice from this center fishermen are undertaking business on the basis of $12 per quintal, and it is understood that at Halifax this price is also the basis of trading at the moment. Porto Rico, Cuba and other West Indian markets are somewhat unsettled, and it is reported that Northern Brazil is over stocked. This is due in a measure to the fact that Newfoundland shippers have been sending their decline in European markets. It is goods to South America because of a interesting note that Norway and Iceland are again to be reckoned with in the dried fish trade, but how potential their competition will be cannot be foretold. The catch in Norway has been short and there has been no estimate of the production in Iceland. Both are shipping to Spain and Portugal however.—N. Y. Fishing Gazette July 5.

Nfld. Scotch Cured Herring.

The Newfoundland Scotch cured herring situation, more than any other varied with the development of new conditions in the trade, both from the aspect of supply and demand. The present situation is none to encourage in view of the heavy stocks yet to be delivered, and the downward trend of prices during the past few weeks. While there were indications of an improvement, and holders of stocks in New York were inclined to be firmer in their ideas as to the future, the situation appears to have again been depressed by the announcement that there are some 20,000 barrels of winter and spring pack Scotch style herring to come forward. The first lots were received during the week, and it is the opinion of the trade that "the quality is only fair." At the same time it must be noted that Newfoundland Scotch cured herring of the fall catch is obtainable at prices as low as $12.50 in some quarters, despite the fact that holders of fancy stock are asking fancy prices. It appears a fortnight ago that the Newfoundland herring situation would show a marked improvement if stocks of Scotch herring should be large, for this variety is the only large herring now obtainable on the market. With a surplus of supplies, however, it is not unlikely that there will be a depressed condition in the market until the bulk of the ordinary quality herring has been worked off.—N. Y. Fishing Gazette July 5.

Fads and Fashions.

Tunics are irregular in hem. Square necks are conspicuous. The caught-under hem is new. The use of embroideries continues. Cuffs are rarely seen on sleeves. The waist line is long and vague. The supple silks are still the best liked. Ruffles are especially popular this season. Black satin frocks are very smart. Afternoon frocks have very short sleeves. Taffeta parasols are embroidered in wool. Slipover knitted blouses continue in favor. The mushroom-shaped hat is a favorite. Brilliant linings for furs are promised. Dropstitch voile is excellent for underwear. Dinner gowns are made entirely of black lace. A cape lining to match a dress is a new wrinkle. Vestees may be made entirely of narrow ruffles. Coats without fastenings are no longer favored. Pointed trains cut in one with the skirt are in use. Large hats are most worn during the midsummer. The coming evening dress will be daringly low. Fringe continues to enjoy an unheard-of success. Some dress skirts are flounced from waist to hem. The evening gown is showing a very plain bodice. Belted coats are made in two-colored combinations. Scarfs are now made of the same material as one's gown.

Order of the Thistle.

The Order of the Thistle, which rumor has it, is shortly to be bestowed on the Prince of Wales, had a warlike origin. During an invasion of Scotland the Danes tried a night attack, and to prevent their tramp being heard marched barefooted. They had succeeded in creeping close to the Scottish lines when one of them trod on a thistle and uttered a shout of pain. The alarm was given, and the attack was beaten off, and out of gratitude the thistle was adopted as the insignia of Scotland. The Prince of Wales will be formally installed in his new dignity in the "Thistle Chapel" that was erected in St. Giles' Cathedral in Edinburgh a few years ago. At the present time, and excluding the King, there are only two royal Knights of the Thistle, the Duke of Connaught and his son.

Bonaparte's Short Severignties.

On Friday, July 12, 1808, Joseph Bonaparte entered Madrid as King of Spain, in consequence of his brother Napoleon becoming Emperor of France and winning victories over European nations. But on July 29 of same year, Joseph Bonaparte felt obliged to retire from Madrid, and though he was restored to this throne on December 2 that year, the many successive victories won by the British invaders over the French invaders of Spain caused him to retain it till only May 14, 1814, when Ferdinand the Seventh was restored. Joseph had been, in 1805, made King of the two Sicilies, one on the island of that name, the other on the mainland of Italy; but in 1806 he was King of Naples only. After losing his Spanish kingdom he resided in the United States of America from 1815 till 1832, when he came to England. In 1841, when the Italians were successfully striving to get an independent kingdom, instead of being under the Austrian Empire, Joseph settled in Italy, but only to die there at Florence on July 28, 1844. Jerome Bonaparte, youngest brother of Napoleon, was, in 1806, made by him King of Westphalia, a manufacturing province of Germany. But by the battle of Waterloo, in 1815, this kingdom was lost to the French, and Jerome became a fugitive in Italy and France. Louis Bonaparte, another brother of Napoleon, was made by him King of Holland, after King Louis Philippe lost his throne, through another French revolution, was elected President of the French Republic in 1848, and Emperor in 1852, but he was deposed in 1870, and died a refugee in England in 1873. The very opposite has been the case with Bernadotte, a general and marshal of the French Army of the Emperor Napoleon Bonaparte. He was so gentle and generous to those whom he had conquered in battle, that he was asked by Charles XIII., King of Sweden, to allow himself to be named heir to the throne. Napoleon could not without difficulty be induced to consent. "What!" said Bernadotte, "will you make me greater than yourself by making me refuse a crown?" And Bernadotte did succeed to that throne as Charles John XIX., and it has been occupied by his descendants ever since.

How Bridges Breathe.

Like us mortals, big steel bridges feel the changes in the weather, and must be built to withstand them, or perish. In the heat of summer a bridge is appreciably longer than it is in winter, and at various times of the year it may be longer on one side than on the other, as when a hot sun plays on one flank, and a cold wind impringes on the other. The "breathing apparatus" of a bridge consists of rollers under the feet at one end, so that the end can move to and fro freely according to the expansion and contraction of the huge girders. Provision is made in the case of the Forth Bridge for so much as two feet of "breathing" of the immense cantilevers.

An Englishman's Home.

When the Prince of Wales visited Southwark recently he and the mayor climbed the stairs of one house to an attic so low that neither could stand upright. The only furniture consisted of two bedsteads with a mattress on each and some rags for bed coverings. There was a window with broken sash frames and several panes of glass were gone. The mayor asked the prince what he thought of it. "It is damnable!" was the emphatic reply. This story was related by the Mayor of Southwark.

The "Irish" Karelians.

They are quartered about the town of Kem, and muster about 4,000, as against the 1,500 of the Red Finn Legion. Dressed in regulation khaki, the "Irish" Karelians, of course, have not forgotten the indispensable shamrock. This, be it said, is worn in the form of a badge, cut out of Maconochie tins. That war is still being waged in Russia and other parts of Europe is not so strange, perhaps, as the circumstance that there are people engaged in it little known to the rest of the world. For instance, while it was common knowledge that around the shores of the White Sea, the Finns formed one of the valuable auxiliaries of the allies opposed to the Bolsheviks, the existence of the Karelian as an allied soldier will come as something brand new to the average reader. The Karelian, however, is one of the Finn family, and his country embraces the southeast corner of Finland and parts of the modern governments of Petrograd, Olenetz, and Archangel. The Karelians are also known as the "Royal Irish Karelians," from the fact that their commanding officer is a British colonel of the Royal Irish Regiment.

Returned With Interest.

Two women of uncertain age, who had long been rivals in love, quarrelled over a trifling gift which was the object of their adoration had indiscreetly bestowed on one of them. "He intended those flowers for me," the elder woman said to the lucky recipient. "You waylaid him on the way to my house, and shamelessly robbed me of his offering. Your guilty face tells tales." The other woman shrugged her shoulders as she sniffed at the pretty bouquet, and answered, sweetly:—"Oh, well, my dear, have it your own way. At any rate, no one would ever accuse you of having a tell-tale face. It is so difficult to read between the lines!" And now the deadly breach between them had widened beyond repair.
