WHEN IS A FAULT NOT A FAULT?

When is a disagreeable or unfortunate habit a fault? I and when is it just the person's inevitable disposition?

In the first place, when is it?

In the second place, when is it mine?

"Heterodoxy is you doxy; orthodoxy is my doxy," said Bishop Warburton. His Disposition His Wife's Fault.

It is a familiar point of view on her matters than doctrine. I used to know a man who always justified his way by saying, "That's my disposition."

He was self-conscious, and it reflected him in many ways. But when his wife also experienced the inevitable mal-adjustments that most of us go through, he had no patience with her. "Just your foolish sensibility," he said. "No need of it. You know you have that fault, and you should have overcome it long ago."

Thus was self-consciousness to be expected and looked out for an inevitable part of an inherited disposition, metamorphosed into foolish sensitiveness which should have been cured long ago, by the simple fact of being "teum" instead of "menn."

And the most interesting fact about it is that his wife was far nearer the normal than he.

Up With the Children.

Again, I knew two sisters who were both intense, nervous and high strung and over-conscientious. Being placed in different positions in life—one as the mother of several children, the other as a private secretary in a business concern, each manifested these traits in different ways. The mother was over-zealous about her children, and used over them to their own detriment; wore herself out getting up in the night half a dozen times to open or close a window, or add or subtract a blanket.

The business woman, on the other hand, was superconscientious about her work. She stayed nights to finish things; she took work home; she gave up a long planned vacation because she thought her employer could not spare her conveniently just then.

Their Talk.

Each was expressing the same traits, whether they be classed under the head of faults or disposition.

But you should have heard them talk about each other. Each was convinced that the other was insanely conscientious and ought to get over it, while she was simply being normally careful and thorough, according to her disposition.

"Orthodoxy is my doxy; heterodoxy is the other man's doxy," I often think of that when I find myself condemning the other man's fault and justifying my own disposition.

Pistol Practice for Bank Clerks.

Pistol practice for bank clerks is provided in a new course arranged by the Boston University College of Business Administration. It is planned to give clerks from the larger banking institutions in Greater Boston and nearby cities a course in the use of the pistol as a defensive weapon. Motion pictures will be used to demonstrate the care of the pistol, and practical instruction in the care and use of firearms will follow.

Ancient Isle Corner Stone of an Empire.

NEWFOUNDLAND CAUSED BRITAIN'S GROWTH.

Fish Industry Taught English to Become Greatest Seafaring Nation in the World.

(From Post-Express, Rochester.)

Renewed discussion by the neighbors of the United States to the north of the desirability of Newfoundland's becoming a part of the Dominion of Canada raises a point upon which probably many Americans are hazy—that there are two distinct British realms, not one, in the portion of North America above the Canadian border. Newfoundland and its relations to Canada are brought out in the following bulletin from the Washington, D.C. headquarters of the National Geographic Society:

"Settlement plays its part in history and historic geography," says the bulletin, "and the fact that Newfoundland has insisted on standing alone while all the other British possessions of North America have united to form the Dominion of Canada is probably partly due to the pride that Newfoundland has always had in being able to boast that theirs is 'the senior British colony'—the first of the children of the motherland to make its home beyond the seas."

"Newfoundland had its settlements as early as the seventeenth century and was a full-fledged British colony with a governor when Canada was New France. South Africa was in the hands of the Dutch, and not a single white settler had landed in Australia."

ACROSS CANADA'S FRONT DOOR.

"Newfoundland has a geographical position of great importance for it largely blocks the broad gulf into which the St. Lawrence river widens, and which forms Canada's front door from Europe. Moreover Newfoundland is the closest part of North America to the British Isles, being only 1,640 miles from Ireland. It is natural that the first transatlantic cable should have been laid to the shores of Newfoundland in 1858 and that out of the North Atlantic eleven first touch American soil either on Newfoundland or its neighboring islets. And when in 1919 aeroplanes finally conquered the Atlantic it was from Newfoundland that both the American and the British machines took off."

"Newfoundland has an area of more than 42,000 square miles, and is therefore practically half the size of Great Britain. Excepting only Cuba, which barely exceeds it in size, it is the largest island of the western hemisphere outside polar waters. With its cliffs of brown stone rising 200 to 300 feet, broken here and there by deep fjords and bays, Newfoundland has a bleak and barren appearance which belies conditions in many parts of the rolling, timbered interior. Along a number of the streams are fertile valleys in which agriculture and stock-raising flourish."

STORY IN ONE WORD—FISH

"In late years mining, stock-raising the manufacture of wool-pulp and newspaper, and a number of other industries have been developed in Newfoundland, but throughout its more than 400 years of history the central story of the island might be told in one word—fish. Boston and Massachusetts have felt deeply indebted to their 'sacred cod,' but after all that important creature came from the Newfoundland bank; and however valuable it has been to New England, it has meant much more to Newfoundland and through Newfoundland to Great Britain."

"A good case could even be made for the cod as a claimant for a place on the British coast-of-arms; for that lowly fish in a way laid the foundation of the worldwide British Empire. Before the discovery of Newfoundland Britishers were of little importance as seafarers. The great wealth of codfish which John Cabot's finding of the island disclosed immediately drew the men of the British Isles out of their industry."

"The next year after the discovery—1498—a fleet of Devon fishermen crossed the Atlantic and returned loaded down with fish; and from that time on for centuries the annual crossing and recrossing of the Atlantic took place. The British kings looked upon the voyages of thousands of men to and from Newfoundland as the best kind of training for seamen and deliberately discouraged the settlement of the island in order to perpetuate the fishing from a British base. Great Britain quickly became a seafaring nation; the navy grew, and with its growth the British Empire spread around the world."

IS SELF-GOVERNING COLONY.

"The Newfoundland of to-day has a government in general somewhat like that of Canada. It is not a crown colony but a self-governing, responsible colony with a governor-general appointed by the British king, a premier, and a parliament of two houses."

"Its educational system is unique. Neither the central government nor political divisions maintain public schools. Instead, religious denominations have charge of schools in proportion to their membership, and funds are furnished to these schools by the government. Practically the only un-

BOOKS AND TALK.

WALT MASON

I've a volume, bound in leather, wherein sleuths and villains glide, and I won't discuss the weather till I've laid the aside; for a good old fashioned story, with a hero who's a scream, beats a conversation heavy, beats the weather as a theme. I will talk about the weather when I have no book to read, when the neighbors get together, swapping mental chicken-feed; I'll discuss the southeast breeze which may bring a needed rain, and will list to all the wheezes touching corn and other grain; I will talk of oats and barley and grow eloquent on hay; oh, I'll stand around and parley of the greenhouse by the day, but I have no use for spelling when I hold a story fine, in the shadow of my shieling, underneath my fig and vine. I don't understand the critter who can argue, talk and plead, who can stand around and twit, when there is a book to read. Neighbors come across the heather to my coop, at close of day, to discuss the windy weather in their rather windy way; if I have no book, I chatter in a style to beat the band, but I bid them scoot and scatter if a novel is at hand.

Winter days are cold and long. Put the robin with his song. One bright morning, crisp and clear, Comes to tell us Spring is near.

Kindly bird that braves the storm, Quits the sunny South and warm. For the North still draped in snow, You are like the friends I know.

When I suffer in despair And my nights are filled with care, They, too, leave their joys behind To be comforting and kind.

When my heart with grief is numb, They, too, brave the storm and come To be near me and to share All the burdens I must bear.

Though mild pleasures they might stay In their sunny far-away, Soon I find them calling here, Messengers of faith and cheer.

King George Congratulates Egypt's King

King George of Great Britain and Lord Curzon, the British Foreign Secretary, have telegraphed Ahmed Fud Pasha, who was proclaimed King of Egypt on March 16, their congratulations and expressions of their desire for the success of the new regime, and that the Monarch might live long to enjoy the fruits of Egyptian independence. King Fud replied, assuring the senders of his constant friendship and his desire to maintain the closest relations with Great Britain.
