"Do you mean—go to London to live, auut?" returned Sara, not believing she could mean it.

"Do you mean—go aunt?" returned Sara, not believing she could mean it.

"Yes I do. What have you to say against it that you are looking like that? I suppose you can live in London if you try?" was the "1?—I do not care where I live," was the sawer, and even Miss Davenal was struck with the subdued tone. "I was thinking of you, Aunt Bettina. Shall you like to quit Hallingham?"

"No, I shall not like to quit it," was the answer, all too redolent of pain. "I have had my troubles in this world, Sara Davenal, but none that I have felt more keenly than I shall feel that. The day of my departure from it will be a bitter one."

"But, aunt—I am only thinking of you when I speak—what good can you do Caroline by going to London?"

"I can give an eye to Mr. Mark."

Sara wondered how, or to what end.

"They will be too grand to care for us, aunt, if what Mark says of his prospects be true."

"If!" slightingly spoke Miss Battina.

Small Pill. Small Dose, Small Price.

Mark Cray had carried out his plans. To his intense astonishment of Hallingham, he had rejected the valuable practice which lad become his by the death of Dr. Davenal, and his mode of relinquishing it had been a nost foolish one. Whether he feared the emonstrances of his brother, the reproaches if Miss Davenal, or the interference of ther friends of his wife, certain it is that tark in disposing of the practice had gone mysley to work. A practice such as Dr. Davenal's, if placed properly on the market, would have brought forth a host of men sager to offer a fair and just sum for it. But if this Mark Cray allowed no chance. He grivately negotiated with a friend of his, a fir. Berry, and sold him the good will for ittle more than an old song.

In vain Miss Davenal said cutting things to Mark; in vain Oswald Cray, when the cal truth reached him, came hastening low from London, in doubt whether Mark ad gone mad. They could not undo the ontract. It was signed and scaled, and if. Berry had paid over the purchase money. Then Mark spoke out upon the subject I his London prospects, and enlarged upon heir brilliancy until Miss Davenal herself as for the moment dezzled. She urged on lark the justice of his resigning to Dr. Davias's daughter part of this purchase money; lark evaded it. His agreement with Dr. lavenal, he said, was to pay his daughter B. Mark was dead to ill suggestions, all entreaties; he completely gnored the last wishes of Dr. Davenal; armed round on Oswald, and flatly told him the was no business of his; and carried the monay to London in his pocket, when he and broiline quitted Hallingham.

They quitted it in haste and hurry, long before things were ripe for them in London, Wark saying to his wife that the sooner they were out of that hornet's nest the better—by shich term he probably distinguished Miss Zavenal and a few others who had contidered themselves privileged to interfere, to far as remonstrance went. Caroline more than seconded his wishes, all he did; Mark had imbued her with his own rose-colored views of the future, and she was eager to inter on its brightness.

But Caroline was not destitute of feeling, and she sobbed on her Aunt Bettina's neck when she came to say farewell. If ever a doubt of the future crossed her mind, it was in that moment—the slightest shade of doubt, of the real terms of the was element. Summer Weakness,

Eastmad Hold up your hands! Traveler

The next to look out for a home was Miss stains Davenal. The saies and affairs had to been arranged so quickly as Mr. Wheatly in his inexperience had saticipated, and sere had been no immediate hurry for the ouse to be vacated. A surgeon in the town as Intreaty for it, and the furniture would ave to be sold by auction. Sara wondered that her aunt did not fix ups residence, and he feared all would be scalle and bustle hien they come to leave. But Bettina Davenal had been fixing upon as in her own mind; at least upon the cality for one—and that was London. Footpad—Hold up your hands! a quasi-sanction such as was given the Duke of Cambridge and other collateral English princes.

By the light of this occurrence it may be seen how infinitely more tragic was the death of that elder brother, Clarence, than at the time appeared. It helps one now to comprehend all the strange, obscure vacillations and cross-currents which marked the conduct of the royal family during the succeeding year, with the protracted breaking up of the Mariborough House menage and the long, aimless journeying abroad of George and his mother, the Princess of Wales. Even the past week has seen a curtofficial note in the London papers correcting, on behalf of the Princess of Wales, a mistaken report that she had attended the court ball on the 30th.

As for the current club reports that the "lady from Malta," as she is popularly styled, is in London, and not only went to the state ball on Tuesday night, but also made her appearance at St. James' Palace, it perhaps deserves repeating as a part of contemporary gossip, but need not be taken too seriously. It is incredible in these days that the secret should be kept much longer; that it will filter by word of mouth through at the secret should be kept much longer that the secret should be kept much longer; that it will filter by word of mouth through all England is a matter of course. So far as can be judged up to the present, its effect is to create a kind of sympathy for George, who seems to have stood out as long as possible under the of course terrific pressure, and at last succumbed only because the interests of the dynasty seemed imperatively to demand submission.

Rum and a Revolver Did It.

Dufferin, Minn., July 10.—Nels J.

Hoff, one of Duluth's pioneer settlers and one of the city's wealthiest citizens, committed suicide yesterday morning, shooting himself through the head with a revolver. Hoff had been a hard drinker, and recently a guardian was appointed at his wife's request for his estate. He was angered by his wife's action and made frequent threats. Yesterday morning he induced her to accompany him to the barn and fired two shots at her, but inflicted no injury. Hethen turned the revolver on himself and fired the remaining three charges. Untold Misery—What a Well-Known Commercial Traveler Suffered, and How He Was Cured.—Gentlemen,—About five years ago I began to be troubled with dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery, from this terrible complaint. I was at that time traveling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but all to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's VEGETABLE DISCOVERY, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to im-Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I scon began to improve. I continued using this medicine, and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured; and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of dyspepsia. (Signed.) T.S.
