Chatham, Oct. 23 .- Prominent citizens of Chatham, the Maple City, are both hearty and unanimous in their declaration that business and industry are in a stablized condition.

"Business is improved in Chatham and getting back to hard pan," as-serted Ald. A. L. Thompson, man-ager of the Canadian Fertilizer company, "and we are in very good shape industrially. Chatham did a very brisk tourist business on the Windsor-Niagara Falls highway this year. Improvements were being made in the Longwoods road this year, interfering somewhat with the traffic, but these have placed the highway on a really permanent basis and should increase the tourist trade next year. The Canadian Fertilizer company has done a good year's business, and we done a good year's business defined and addition to our plant. Collection Gathered by Dr. Woolverton One of Most Interesting in Canada.

FILLS WHOLE FLOOR

Is Fruit of Lifetime of Enthusiastic Endeavor as Specimen Hunter.

Carefully and methodically assemoled on the top floor of a stately old residence on Grand avenue, London has one of the most unique and interesting private museums in the dominion, if not on the whole conti-

Every citizen of London has heard at one time or another of the wonderful collection of Dr. Woolverton; indeed, his fame as a collector has spread far beyond the confines of his home city, which is one of the reasons why his collection continues to grow faster than he can find room to properly array it. But, although his visitors are many, comparatively few Londoners have had the opportunity of viewing the many objects of beauty and absorbing interest which e has assembled in his home. To be afforded a glimpse of these treasures, the fruit of a long lifetime of en-thusiastic endeavor as a collector, is rare pleasure, but to be shown the under the personal guidance of Dr. Woolverton himself, whose subdued enthusiasm is subtly infectious, is to experience an intellectual treat and a practical education not soon for-

Such an experience recently fell to the lot of an Advertiser representa-tive who sought out Dr. Woolverton t his home with a request to be al-owed to view his collection. And as a result of the interesting hour or more which followed, an impression was indelibly registered that here was mething which could most profit ably be placed at the disposal of every resident of the city, especially the children and young people, if only some suitable public building could be provided to properly display the many examples of the beauty and wonders of nature which are there assembled. In short, the desirability of a public museum for London was self-evident. One could not help wondering if citizens realize how much they are missing through the lack of some such institution.

Thousands of Relics. But of all this Dr. Woolverton had little to say as he led the way from case to case of the specimens which fill every available corner of the large top floor of his residence. There are literally thousands of them, and yet it is doubtful if a visitor coul point out any object of which the doctor could not off-hand give an interesting and accurate account.

He has gone back two million or hore years to lay the foundations for his collection. The present site of London occupied a place on the earth's surface as far back as that, and at least two localities he has definitely identified. One is now known as Skuse's gravel pit, and the other as Anthistle's gravel pit at Wellington and Cheapside streets.

From both of these spots Dr. Woolverton has obtained marvelously per fect fossilized specimens of both the frog-headed and toad-headed trilo-bite, creatures which lived and had their being in these parts at least two million years ago during the Devonian or Silurian period of the earth's development. Fossil trilobites are found at many places throughout the northern portion of the American continent, but the finest specimens anywhere in the world come from London, Ontario, and some of the hest of those found here are in the Woolverton collection. The fossil remains of another denizen of these parts in the dawn of time, is another much-prized reasure. It is the complete head of a pre historic animal, which was accident-ally turned up on a farm near Ingersoll some years ago, and after spending some time in a barn there as a local curiosity, found its way into the hands of Dr. Woolverton, who has identified it as an early Saurian of the precarboniferous era. The head, which resembles somewhat that of crocodile, is about two feet long and perhaps a foot or more in breadth It is nipped off close to the base of the skull, and the theory is that the creature lost its head in a battle with some other pre-historic monster.

Fossil Corals.

But there was a time when the whole of this section was at the known of the ocean. Evidence of that is abundantly shown in the fossil corels which form a part of the cel-lection. They have all been gathored between Niagara and Detroit, Bosunquet township abounds in them, and they can be picked up near Theafore by the wagon load. They are all salt-water corals and could only have got here through this part of the country having been at one time cov-ered by the sea. Fortunately for ma.

Other Industries.

Most of the specimens come from Bermuda and their delicate tracery has to be seen to be appreciated. The various formations delicate tracery has to be seen to be appreciated. The various formations are named, in accordance with their fanciful appearance, Mushroom Brain, Stellated, Staghorn, Pipe Organ, Beehive and Chain coral.

Bewilderingly beautiful are the variegated specimens of sea shells. Nothing could exceed the richness of the coloring in many of them and the delicacy of their outlines. One specimen has the appearance of a stringed harp. Others, called Operculum, startlingly resemble the human eye both in shape and color. One variety, the Abalonas, found off the coast of California, have very sinister proper-MRS. M'KENZIE'S FUNERAL

WEAPON IS EFFECTIVE.

Indian arrows with heads chipped from a flint-like substance chert are an interesting part of the collection of Dr. Woolverton of this city. That they were effective and deadly weapons of warfare is evident from the above photograph, which shows a portion of an Indian's skull with the arrow-head still imbedded in it. The redman's death was probably instantaneous. This interesting relic, estimated to be two centuries old, was found during street excevations in Sarnia some years ago.

Cases Are Crowded

Other natural curiosities there are by the thousand. Each case contains enough specimens to fill about three cases in the ordinary museum. There are stone lilies (Enurenites) from Grimsby, perfect twelve-sided garnets from Parry Sound, marine curios, such as the saws of sawfish, swords of swordfish, teeth of sharks, sperm whales and walrus, sea-horses, sca-urchins, starfish, eggs of sharks and skates, and a silica sponge from the Philippines, a very rare specimen, indeed.

A whole section is given up to ores and minerals of almost endless variety, including some agates, wonder ful in their polish and coloring. Pet-rified woods and weeds also find a place along with a petrifled apple and petrified birdnest. Not the least interesting and valuble part of the museum is the section given up to Indian relics, Many of the specimens would bring foy to the heart of any red-blooded boy who has ever dreamed of thrilling encounters with the red man. They include numberless specimens of include numberless specimens of Nothing short of a book on the sub-

Ceremonial tools (some of them 300 years old) were found in an old Indian fort on the site of the present country home of Ray Law-son in London township) include an ancient pipe of peace shaped like a tomahawk, two totems found in the grave of a chief near Sarnia, beautifully marked pottery and skillfully-made tools of bone and shell.

Military Relics.

Students of early Canadian history would find much to interest them in the collection. Dr. Woolverton has been curator for the London and Midilesex Historical society for the past 25 years, and has gathered many interesting relics of early days. Among them might be mentioned bayonets used by troops of Sir Isaac Brock in the war of 1812, canister, grape-shot and chain-shot, and some of the good old-fashioned 6-pound round shot fired by General Yeo at the retreating American army at Stoney Point.
A large collection of coins contains specimens of the early copper tokens issued by the provinces, and paper scrip issued against the Canadian

The preacher of the evening was Rev. D. C. MacGregor, of St. Andrew's United church. He put before the pastor and people the prob-lems the church of God faces at the present day. "That there are such problems facing the church and the world," said the doctor, "is evidenced by the friction and trouble in the Oriental countries and the chaotic state of affairs among the European nations.

"In order that the church may solve these problems whose solution is the gospel of Christ." tinued Dr. MacGregor, "she must keep in ever closer contact and com-munion with her Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. In her relations with Jesus Christ. In her relations with the world she must keep herself unsulited, but, above all, it is her duty and privilege to show forth to the nations of the earth the principles of Christian brotherhood."
