Hanlan is in a quandary. He scarcely knows what to do about Plaisted's challenge. It is fully aware that if he accepts in good faith people will aware that if he accepts in good faith people will declare the arriar a hippodrome. If, on the other hand, he declines it, Plaisted's backer and friends and his own unjust critics will declare he sa farial. Our own opinion of the affair is that Plaisted's friend is a shrewd speculator, who thinks he cun make money by getting Hanlan to row, and is willing to forfeit his thousand dollars if allowed to colling to forfeit his thousand dollars if allowed to colling to forfeit his thousand dollars if allowed to colling to forfeit his thousand dollars if allowed to colling to get if Hanlan were to foll wour advice he would have nothing to do with it except on the clear unders anding that it we to be an exhibition contest.

THE SPORTING WORLD bibited, the stars of the evening were introduced. Mace held himself in his well-known easy style, while the Maori was a little strained in his attitude, but he held his guard high, although he did no but he held his guard high, although he did not move his hards about much. His shaping was neither artistic nor clumsy, but more like an automation. He was the first to lead off with his left on the face, which landed lightly. Mace was short in his return at the head. The half-breed then visited the Englishman's head, but it was a slap rather than a blow. This gave Mace an opening, and he straight-conntered his pupil on the nosa. Slade came to his work well and put in two rattling hits, both on the frontispiece, which brought on rapid exchanges, in which Mace's wonderful ducking played conspict us part. There was no heavy hitting whatever, and it was really difficult to determine the calibre of the Anti-odean gladiator. The return lasted less than two minutes. While the contestants were resting Tom Early o Boston presented Mace with a gold-headed cane. W. C. Jamerson, the jockey who was convicted of stealing the race-horse Valpariaso, has been sent-enced to the penitentiary for six months. the contestants were resting Tom Early o Boston presented Mace with a gold-headed came.

Mace was the one to lead off the second round, with a left-hander on the st-mach, which, though short was followed by a hot-one from the same hand on the face, Slade putting in a counter on t e side of the head. Mace also put in a clean counter before he got back. Slade tried at the stomach, but Mace jum ed out of distance and the ked three of Slade's blows, but the half-breed finally hit him on the nose prett-heavily. His next trial was short, which brought on a couple of hot counters from Mace, and these closed the round.

On the third round Slade sent out his left at the stomach, which hace avoided, and landed his left full in the face, his head ducking the swinging right, which was sent in, but as he came up again slade caught him with his right hand and this brought on mutual counters, Mace crossing on the side of the head, Slade hitting straight our. several times Mace landed on the right ear, but his pupil finally ra lied and fought the old man to the ropes, when time was called. The bout was well received, and the audience clamored for more and would not recognize it as the wind up.

Though somewhat blown from the fast work in the arevious rounds, both men shaped them elves in good style. Slade was the fresher of the two and opened the work by a stingit great hander on the face, which was answered by a good one on the nose and mouth, the New Zealander cross-countering his tutor on the head. This he repeated twice, and though Mace's science gave him miny fine telling hits, the young one finally drove him to the edge of the stage, where he swung his right hand into Mace's car with force enough to stager him and raise an angry flush. It was a wicked blow, and must have reminded Mace of the blow Tom King gave him in 1803.

The Princess of Waies has actually taken the warpath against the shooting matches where live pigeons are the marks, and is with many of the ladies vicorously agitating against the practice. She and they intend pe itioning for a prohibitory law. Her royal highness secured first blood by a refusal of the magistrates of Southwater to its innkeger, a Mr. Hammend, of a license to have pigeon shooting on his crounds. When lovers quarrel the taffy trade weakens.

The real glove fight occurs when a woman tries to put a No. 6 glove on a No. 7 hand. Mrs. A. Nelson, Brantford, writes: "I was a sufferer from Chronic Dyspepsia for eleven years. Always after eating an intense burning sensation in the stomach, at times yery distressing, caused a drooping and languid feeling, which would last for several hours after eating. I was recommended by Mr. Popplewell, chemist, of our city, to try Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery and Dyspeptic Cure, and I am thankful to say that I have not been better for years; that burning sensation and languid feeling has all gone, and food does not lie heavy on my stomach. Others of my family have used it with best results."

In the fifth fight in the cocking tournament on Wednesday in New Orleans, J. J. Heigge sent in a Mississippi blue red, and George Thomas, of Canada, a brown red. The Canada bird had one fineh and three-quarter gaffs, and the Mississippi bird short heels. The fight was won by the Mississippi bird, the Canadian being killed. In the seventh dight, the Canadian being killed. In the seventh dight, Thomas, of Canadia, put into the pli a Georgia red, and Dr. Edwards, of Mississippi, a dark gray. The Miss saippi bird soon backed and ran way. Thomas, the man taking part in this brutal pastime, was, we believe, formerly a saloon keeper on Ad-laide street in this city. If it is the same, he halted originally from Believille.

The Port Hope papers contain long accounts of the sparring match between C. A. Smith of that city, and Jack Stewart of London. In the first round Stewart scored a knock down, and throughout the balance of the battle it was give and take in dead earnest, rib ronsters and nut crackers following in such rapius succession that it was useless to attempt to record the blows. The men were several times called out and cheered by the audience between the rounds, and at the end of the fourth round and wind-up, the referee announced the result as even-up. Stewart, however, is said to have had decidedly the best of it.

a few colonial aspiring politicians (office seeker-) a chance to air themselves in the imperial legislature at large salaries probably, and still further increase the enormous expense of our dominion government. Where the interests of the empire at large were concerned we would be voted down in all instances and our duties levied on British goods would soon go by the board. We would still be dependent colonists, not as independent as we now are; for now we can levy duties as we please, and are semi-independent at least. It is a wild dream of Sir Alexander Galt, who in 1850 was one of the hottest annexationists there was in Montreal. What we want is to be still more let alone. We require a cheaper and more simple government and a sweeping reform in the civil service at Ottawa. Sweep away thousands of offices held now in plurality there and in many of the province. Insures in the London, Guarantee and Accident Company, Limited), of London, England.

CAPITAL . . $1,250,000

The prevalent idea of the public seems to be that unless they are engaged in some hazardous occupation, or are frequently traveling by rail, driving fast horses, hunting, shooting, skating, boating, bicycle riding, or going up in balloons, they are not liable to accidents. No greater delusion, however, could exist, for while every occupation has its peculiar risks by far the greater number of claims for compensation are caused by slips, falls bruises, cuts, sprains, burns, broken bones, and such like.
