President of Boston University, etc.

Not a few people will be startled to learn that the cradle of the human race was at the North Pole, but Dr. Warren, who has given to this work the study of many years, sustains this theory with a surprising array of evidence, and this in turn throws much light on the most vital of the current problems of biology, terrestrial physics, ancient cosmology, comparative mythology, primeval history, scientific anthropology, and Hebrew and Ethnic tradition.

The conclusions are strange and even startling at first; indeed, some of them might well be termed epoch-making for our study of origins; but they are throughout supported by honest secular facts and arguments. . . . The new light cast upon the whole field of mythology is surprising and gratifying to the last degree. . . . If there is not somewhere an unsuspected mass of rebutting fact, the argument must be regarded as decisive. The conclusion, if allowed, will compel a complete revision of our conceptions of prehistoric man, and his origin and capacities.—Prof. BORDEN, P. BOWNE, LL.D., of Boston University.
