

Renewable Energy and Conservation

Considerable government funds have been made available for research in energy conservation, fossil fuels, energy transportation and transmission. Research has also been directed towards the economical and efficient harnessing of renewable energy resources such as solar, wind, biomass and geothermal power. Research is also directed towards conservation technology.

