

At all events, the information at hand has been placed before the reader as impartially as possible, and he will be able to satisfy his leanings by determining mentally which is the south side of the "streight" and which the north. It is no more difficult than the problem offered by Mr. Frank Stockton in his story of "The Lady and the Tiger."

It really makes no difference, as far as the Hospital is concerned, nor does it affect the interest of the story told. The only regret is that the question as to why the medals were not distributed has not been made plain, and, no doubt, the mystery—if there be one—will never be solved.

Note from Mr. Sandham's article:—

"It would appear from this resolution that a second die had been ordered, as it is quite evident that a gold medal $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter could not be produced for three or even five guineas. I have not been able to procure any particulars respecting the gold medals, nor of the lot first received, and subsequently rejected, by the Society. If any person can furnish information on these points, I shall feel greatly obliged. The bronze and silver medals are seldom met with, and the existence of the medals was unknown to the majority of collectors until a recent date, when a specimen was sold in New York for a very large amount.

"I have learned that a number of these medals are still to be found in possession of persons residing on the Niagara Frontier, and other parts of Ontario, and they are looked upon with great reverence, nothing short of actual want being likely to induce their owners to part with these records of their ancestors' loyalty and courage."
