country to an astual alliance; but they transmitted to America a treaty purely eventual which was to receive positive and permanent force, upon the continuation of hoflile measures and designs, on the part of the British ministry towards America. It is therefore the British Ministry again, who have given the ratification of force and effect, to this eventual treaty of alliance, while the Americans seem, on the other hand, to have been reluctant, to the very last moment, to shut the door to reconciliation.

It is no fecret, that the court of France have acted a cold and unfriendly part towards the Americans, till they had, by their own exertions established their own caufe. There are three millions of people in America as fully convinced of that proposition, as the commiffioners themfelves, who call the interpolition of France infidious. The fame three millions of people are equally convinced, that there is no other unfurmountable obfacle to a national reconciliation with Great Britain, but the fatal interposition of a British Ministry, more infidious than the court of France: and, I am confident, that of all the millions of people throughout the French dominions, without excepting the Minister himfelf who figned the eventual treaty, there is no one who is unapprized or unconvinced of these truths. It is folly to suppose, that recent, reluctant and self-interested obligations, on the part of France, fhould take full and inftantaneous possession, of the hearts and affections of three millions of people in America, to the exclusion even of regret upon the lofs of ancient hereditary connections and fraternal confanguinity. But there is no road left open for a pacific interview which might lead to reconcilement. There is a British Ministry possessing every avenue, and interposing fire and fword. The catalogue of obligations from the court of France towards America is yet but recent, and little more than a blank. It is the British Ministry who, by every thought, word and act, are labouring to fill up the blanks of that catalogue. It was the continuation of the war against America, after the offer of the conciliatory bills, which first gave force and effect to the eventual alliance with France; and therefore it is the farther profecution of the fame hoftile and vindictive measures on the part of the Ministers of this country, which alone can drive America fill clofer into the arms of France, and cement that alliance for ever.

In the whole conduct of America, there is univerfally the mark of reluctant neceffity. If an alliance with France had been their original choice and preference, they need not have concluded an eventual treaty. Obferve another incident upon the arrival of this eventual treaty in America, which curforily may appear a trifle light as air; yet, to my judgment, it bears the mark of deep imprefion—Monf. Gerard, who attended on the part of his own court, as the anxious candidate for this eventual alliance, introduces it in terms denoting his triumphant fatisfaction : " The connections formed by the king " my mafter, with the United States of America, is fo agreeable to him, that he could " no longer delay fending me to refide among you, for the purpofe of cementing thofe " eventual engagements which have acquired immediate, pofitive, permanent and indiffoluble " force."—The Congrefs return their anfwer in terms of firmnefs and conftancy, but not of triumph—" We lament that luft of domination which gave birth to the prefent war,
