At New York Horse Show Miss Roosevelt Was Only One Who Refused to Obey.

New York, Nov. 23.—Local fashion has decreed that the eyes of interesting palaces for the complexion are over. Faces must now have a rosy flush. The horse show of 1903 has lighted a flame in the cheeks and lips of women, and that flame is fashion's latest word to the women of New York. A flame for each cheek and a flame for the lips, and a faint flame for the nose.

Not within the memory of this generation—perhaps not since the days of wisecracks and patches—has woman's reproachable character permitted themselves to dip quite so deeply and with quite so obvious an effect into the pigments of commerce. It was the horse show's first public message to the sex necessities.

The beauty of the horse show in the social developments is that it presented evidence for every woman. There were, the familiar faces in the familiar boxes, and then it was seen that beauty's face had taken on the super-carmine all around the great glittering ring, and there was no getting away from the fact that fashion was spoken.

There are two ways of using cosmetics. You stain the cheeks with mahogany to bring out its interior beauty. That's one way. You paint a fence to disguise the wood. That's the other way. The fashionable woman of former years treated her face as it was a piece of mahogany. The fashionable woman of 1903 treats hers as a fence. It's a great pity, too, for many of the faces under their florid disguise are pretty, some are dignified, a few almost pathetic in their beauty.

By way of exception to prove the rule, the pale, intelligent, and elegant Alice Roosevelt shone from a conspicuous box and offered undimmed the work of nature. Her face was the result of reckless art. It is singular that among women of society Miss Roosevelt is the only one who has not applied the palm of one's hand. Miss Roosevelt's indefatigable paler makes her an extreme case of the modern "make-up" and her head make her a distinguished one in the world.

The President's daughter presented a picture of the most delicate accentuation of brows and lashes. The President's daughter presented a picture of the most delicate accentuation of brows and lashes.

Paris, Nov. 24.—To France the village of Amieres is infinitely more valuable than the military school of St. Cyr. The school is the nursery of the nation's geniuses, but Amieres is the nursery of the nation's poets.

When the French poet utters a diminutive in its most infantile expression they repeat, twice or thrice, the first syllable of the word. Perhaps it was in this way that the French poet was "nourished" by the village of Amieres.

The "nourish" is a fetching figure. Naturally she is generally buxom, naturally she has rounded, rosy cheeks, and she assumes an air of serene importance. For is she not by far the most important personage in the household, the font where the infant hope of the house nourishes itself?

Her dress is a masterpiece. She wears a neat, spotlessly clean dress and invariably a long apron which she has fastened to her bodice and is adorned with a white cap, of finest fastened in front with a gilt ball. From the back of her cap depend two long streamers that float down to her knees.

French love of harmony of color often displays itself in "nourish" and "nourish" considered as an entity. The color of "nourish" cap streamers and of her mantle of harmony until it nearly touches the ground. In winter this wrap is of woolen cloth and in summer of some light cotton material.

Uncle Sam's Pension List Foots Three Billions

Washington, Nov. 24.—A cubic foot of coinage gold is worth $200,977.92. Pension commissioner Ware has computed that the outlay for pensions since the foundation of the government, if measured in gold, would make an obelisk ten feet square and 106 feet high. This illustration, perhaps, gives an idea of what $3,000,000,000 means; a billion ordinarily expresses something of which the human mind has little comprehension.

It is an extraordinary fact that the total cost of the pension system from the foundation of the government to June 30, 1895, or until the civil war was itself over, a period of three-quarters of a century, amounted to but $90,000,000, or the present disbursement of eight months and nine days. This is an example of the magnitude of modern operations. Pensions of the revolutionary war have cost up to date but $70,000,000, and as there are but five revolutionary pensioners now on the rolls the chapter is nearly closed.

During the last year the number of Civil War participants on our rolls fell off nearly 10,000, while the number of civil war widows increased by 23,241. This shows that wives are younger than their husbands more often than ever, and also that our pension laws operate to put something of a premium upon the young woman marrying the old soldier many years her senior.

Commissioner Ware recommends in his recent report, as have several of his predecessors, that a law be passed to prevent the granting hereafter of a pension to the woman who marries a soldier after he has become a pensioner. This would permit the pensioner who draws no pension to marry, and, on dying subsequently, to leave his widow eligible to a pension, but it would put off the inducement to marry old soldiers near the end of their lives for the sake of their pensions, which is said to be operative. This recommendation ought to be adopted by congress, in the interest of fair play and public morals, but there is little likelihood that it will be.

No representative enjoys identifying himself with any measure or any efforts tending to curtail the pension roll or to lessen those eligible to a place on it. It is very much easier to get the laws liberalized than to make any change in the other direction.

The average age of participants of the war for the Union is now 83 years. The question is constantly asked: How many survivors of the Civil War remain un pensioned, exclusive of deserters? This subject has been carefully investigated by Thomas D. Yeager, Commissioner Ware's private secretary, with results which will occasion some surprise.

More Than Average Importance

are our new lines of Oxford and Cambridge Cheviots for Winter Overcoats. More than average importance, too, our special price of $28 for our regular $32 materials. It's an unmatched price on matchless goods.

PARTRIDGE ARE INQUISITIVE.

Curiosity, its Chief Weakness, an Aid to the Hunter.

Partridge hunting is one of the best sports in the fall of the year. One who has followed the birds after they have been hunted and pitched from fifty to a hundred yards away, learns much more of their habits and comes across many instances not only of their matchless coloration, but also of their almost matchless cunning. There is not a bird more cunning than the male grouse of three seasons.

The partridge's chief weakness is that it believes itself safe when it is in a tree. It has one other weakness which works to its undoing. It is an inquisitive bird.

The passion to find out things is strong in it. It wants to know what is going on and what is being done. It flies from the man, pitches and hunts for an immediately with which its color blends.

There is squats, perfectly melted into the surrounding soil, leaves and vegetation. It remains quiet while the hunter walks in the effort to find it, and it will stay still as long as he continues to search.

If, however, he will go to the neighborhood of the pitch, get behind a tree and remain still, the grouse will be able to remain in its same position only for a little while. In five minutes or so, having heard nothing from the man, it will where he consuls with a desire to know where he is and what he is doing.

It begins this search very cautiously, moving only a few inches at a time, traveling with its belly close to the ground, and its neck stretched out and depressed, taking up as little room as possible. It seldom goes directly upon the back track, but makes a slight detour and comes into the line of its first flight from right to left.

It gets bolder as the moments pass, walks upright and more swiftly, casting quick glances from side to side. Not finding the man it will, as a last resort, hop upon a stump or log and survey the undergrowth from that point of view. When it does this it invariably discovered and offers an excellent mark as it stands with head up.

The male bird is much more likely to look for its pursuer than the hen. The female is more timid and generally keeps on going once she is satisfied that it is safe to leave her hiding place.

FRENCH FOSTER-MOTHERS.

Paris, Nov. 24.—To France the village of Amieres is infinitely more valuable than the military school of St. Cyr. The school is the nursery of the nation's geniuses, but Amieres is the nursery of the nation's poets.

As mothers the "nourishes" are the kindest of women, altho they are separated from their own little ones. Gently they handle their small charges, and in the most amiable fashion sing to them the songs of Amieres.

Her Heavy Type.
To be sure, the "nourish" are of rather a heavy type; their brains, their nerves are not the most active, the most refined. But a starving man does not wait for a philosopher or an aesthetic to give his dinner.

POLITICAL NOTES

The annual meeting of the Liberal-Conservative Association for West Ontario, held at Smith's Hotel, Wednesday afternoon, President Major Joseph Beck, after sixteen years' service in that position, was permitted to retire, being first made honorary president and member of the executive committee.

Parry Sound Liberal-Conservatives met at Emerald yesterday and George McCormick, M.P., the present member, was tendered the unanimous nomination for the next election. He, however, regretted inability to accept, owing to the pressing nature of business affairs and withdrew all the strong persuasion that was brought to bear to induce him to alter his decision. Dr. Freshour of Magnetawan was then tendered the nomination and accepted. He is regarded as a strong candidate.

J. P. Whitney, Conservative leader, is at the Queen's. He has come to Toronto to be present at the session of the Legislative Committee on assessment, which is in session in the Parliament Buildings.

The Woodstock Express is informed on good authority that Thomas Seddon of Ingersoll will be the Conservative standard-bearer at the coming Dominion election in South Oxford, and it is further stated that some people "who think they know what they are talking about" say that Sir Richard Cartwright will not again be a candidate in that riding.

Class Leaders' Association.
The fifth grand rally of the Toronto Class Leaders' Association was held in Broadway Tabernacle last night, when President R. C. Vaughan and Dr. S. S. Inspector Chapman delivered addresses. It was decided to have an annual convention in Trinity Methodist Church on Thursday evening, Dec. 10.
