The Gay and the Solemn in Old Quebec Mangled in Old Quebec Saturday and Sunday

Streets Present Picturesque Appearance—Soldiers and Sailors Attend Divine Service and Hear Inspiring Sermon.

YOUNG MEN STILL SPEAK LOVINGLY OF OLD FRANCE

QUEBEC, July 19.—(Staff Special.)—All the grey old ghosts of the Canadian centuries might have been parading the gloomy, rain-drenched streets of Quebec on Saturday night when the C.P.R. train which left Montreal at 9 o'clock in the morning rolled its hungry, weary load into the City of Champlain about 7 o'clock.

All nations and tongues seemed to be gathered in the shadowy atmosphere, and the gay peasant costumes fitted here and there, vivified by the youth of to-day and recalling the fathers of old Indians no longer savage but uniformed in the King's khaki; sailors of Britannia, with the solid physique and the accumulated glory of the ocean empire; sailors, too, with eager discipline, from across the channel, wearing their red-knobbed caps with Gallic graces; Canadian militia men of all classes and ranks, and variations of costume; civilians of every description, the majority feminine and young, undecorated by the downpour, and all overlooking with the animation and unwonted interest of an occasion that was not to be controlled by mere weather.

The streets were gradually discerned to be rich in studied color, with accents at every other street of hemlock or of brighter holiday material. Flags at every window, tropical in color, making a dazzle of changing light through the drizzle, broke up the heavy obscurity.

And when the rain ceased the narrow, precipitous streets grew more crowded and hilarious, and became a riotous sparkling patchwork of electric lights and thronging crowds.

A blaze of light around the Chateau Frontenac, thinning out thru the city, scatters by degrees into the starry darkness of this majestic river scene, and fittingly supplements the memories of the city's unwearying vigils. But the unwearying vigils, but the unwearying vigils were more particularly interested in the flight of some five balloons which were raised as soon as the rain permitted to each was attached a coupon, redeemable for $1 or $2.

Sunday's inspirations. Sunday morning broke with summer glory, and the river spread its wonderful vista with unrivalled splendor. The slaty blue grey washes of the steadily in the tide, and every flag and every decoration in the city strained light under the driving breeze. Every heart stirred and every condition fitted to enthusiasm. The world looked throne of light, and Canada sat on the throne of love to religious observance.

If the French-Canadian wished it, he would exchange a land for a language. He had ideas and imagination, zeal and enthusiasm and valor, but he keeps them all in the language of Romance, and the Saxon tongue spreads where the Gallic genius does not reach. This thought is borne to one constantly as one confronts the power of the French idealism. Such mental force set free in the English medium would sway the nation far more strongly than at present.

But all the fire and brightness are smothered in the tongue of the past and Shakespeare and Adam Smith dominate the land. Should the French-Canadian ever learn English, Canada will once more be born anew. This will be true of religion and politics and all the things that make life live, for, but the toller dies in a day.
