Despite the loss of many British and neutral ships, German submarine warfare has been a failure. The British navy and the British merchant fleet are stronger now than when the war broke out, and it is that navy and that merchant fleet which account for the prosperity of Canada today and its immunity from direct attack. We are too apt to forget this fact in estimating the part the Mother Country is playing in the war; nor do we always remember what her tremendous financial strength means to Canada at this moment. If Canada wishes to do her share as Britain is doing it she will send more men to the front, and do it without delay.

THE RECRUITING CAMPAIGN

The response to the latest call for recruits in St. John has been so disappointing as almost to justify a demand for conscription. If the most earnest appeals, based on the indisputable fact that Canada stands today in the very shadow of German conquest, and that Canada is really fighting for her existence, have no effect upon the young men, then we are drawing nearer the time when conscription will be necessary. Only by mobilizing and equipping armies can we hope to win, and, if men will not voluntarily enlist, where are the armies to be secured?

One would think the torpedoing of the Hesperian, which had St. John people on board, as well as wounded Canadian soldiers, would itself so stir the righteous indignation of our young men that recruits would come forward in large numbers. Yet it is utterly humiliating to, be compelled to talk of conscription. Where is the manhood of our men? Who is there, with the enemy at the gate, that must be driven to defend his own?

One still hears occasionally a remark that this is England's war, and Englishmen should do the fighting, and yet, but for Britain's fleet St. John would today be under German rule. It is also said that the English are slow in recruiting, but here is an extract from a letter from a Canadian now at Shorncliffe:—

must be sent from Canada to England.

The French official report pays the following polite tribute to German kultur:

"On September 1 four German aeroplanes came to bombard Luneville, an open town, where there is absolutely no military installation to destroy. Our enemies brought refinement to the point where they clearly aimed at the populous sections, and selected for the execution of their operations the day and the hour of the market. As a consequence the victims, unfortunately, were too nua Canadian now at Shorncliffe:—

but even there most of them have enlisted."

The women must take a hand in the recruiting campaign. Too many of them are holding back their men. The National Council of Women for Patriotic Service has just issued an open letter to the other women of Canada, urging the need for fighting men, and pointing out that there are more reasons now than when the war began for rallying to the colors. The appeal says:

possible: "Germany has had enough of the war. She will fight on desperately and determinedly if she is forced to fight, and she will not be beaten without many more months of fearful struggle and endurance. Her successes have been considerable, but she fears her power to hold on to them. The German general staff knows that she has passed the zenith of her strength, and that neither Great Britain nor Russia have reached theirs. Germany never nethe colors. The appeal says:

"If we hold back our men we are courting defeat; and defeat means, not a vague misfortune to the Empire at large, but the very practical result of a Canada governed by Germans."
