TO BUILD VESSELS AT OROMOCTO?

A plan for starting a shipbuilding plant at Oromocto has been in the air for some time, and may yet be developed, says the Fredericton Gleaner. If the plan goes through it is probable that, before many months, Oromocto will again be the centre of an industry such as flourished there in years gone by. Last fall, the paper says, company promoters, including both United States and New Brunswick men, visited St. John, and later took a quiet trip up the river, visiting different points as far up as Oromocto. On their return to St. John they seemed to be very favorably impressed with Oromocto as a place to start the building of wooden ships. The main difficulty, at that time, seemed to be to get men who were familiar with the building of wooden ships. All the men around St. John capable of carrying on that kind of work were engaged in similar work being carried on at other places. Many of the old-time shipbuilders, who formerly worked in that line around Oromocto, had either died or removed to other portions of the world. It was said last fall that those interested in the scheme would probably return to Oromocto and other points along the river as early this spring as conditions would permit, and would go more thoroughly into the matter. On this trip they plan to make a more thorough study of a suitable place for a site, as well as of the labor and lumber supply. Their coming is eagerly awaited by those who are most interested in this project. Should the plans materialize, as planned by the promoters, there are hopes times ahead for Oromocto.

SIX CASES ON ANNIVERSARY OF PROHIBITION HERE

Three Drunkenness Charges; Three of Liquor Law Act Violation

No Suspended Sentences This Year, Says Magistrate; Act to be Carried Out to the Full

On the first day of the second year of prohibition, three prisoners on drunkenness charges and three liquor cases were before Magistrate Ritchie in the police court this morning. The first two prisoners on the sheet were brought up together charged with drunkenness, and accused that they had broken a bottle just before being arrested. His Honor said that they could not drink without having liquor in their possession and so were liable to $200 each or eight months in jail. "Now that we are coming into the second year of the prohibition act, we're going to carry it out to the full. There'll be no suspended sentences in the second year." According to the Standard this morning the late conservative government has done more for prohibition than either the present government or myself; but in spite of this plating of the credit, I have done all I can and, please God, I will continue to do all I can to keep down the rum for five more years at least. A third prisoner charged with drunkenness was asked where he got it and he replied that he took it from a stranger. "Why did you take it?" asked His Honor. "Oh, I'm in the habit of taking it when I can get it." "Oh, you are! Just get that down clear. I'm able to follow you quite readily. I've been told that I was deaf, but I seem to be hearing you beautifully. When did you ever get it before?" "Two weeks ago I was given a drink on the railway track." "And you drank it there?" "Yes." "You're liable to $50 for that. You can't drink in public. When else did you get it?" The prisoner here became rather uncommunicative. "Well," said the magistrate, "you're liable for being drunk, $5; for drinking in public, as you just confessed, $50, for having liquor in your possession, as you must have had to get drunk in it, $50. Take these three men below. I pity the three of you for making fools of yourselves as to get drunk." Cecil C. Currie was charged with being drunk and having liquor in his possession. On his information, Patrick O'Keefe was arrested and charged with supplying liquor. There were two separate charges, one on April 29 and another on April 30. Currie was the only witness called, the defendant pleading not guilty to both charges. On Monday, according to Currie, O'Keefe in Union street and asked him for a bottle. He said he returned with it and said to Currie for $5. On Tuesday he said he met O'Keefe in Waterloo street and asked him for another, and he went away to get the bottle. "Did he go as far as Peters street?" asked His Honor. "I don't know." "I ask you," said the magistrate, "because I believe that there's one side of Peters street where you need never be dry." "I met him in an alley," said the witness; "gave him $5 for a flask." O'Keefe here pleaded guilty to the first charge, but said he knew nothing of the second. Rev. W. D. Wilson moved that under Section 97, the defendant should be termed a persistent violator and sent up for a year without a fine. His Honor thought that although "persistent violator" might be one who had not been convicted three times, yet O'Keefe had only one conviction against him, and he thought he would strike a fine of $400 or a year in jail. "Can you give me a check for $400, O'Keefe?" he asked. "Can you give me a check for $200?" but I can give you a check for $200," said the witness. "I think you'll have to see me and raise the two," said His Honor. O'Keefe and Currie were both remanded to jail. A woman was charged with vagrancy and sentenced to nine months in jail. Her husband is overseas. Policeman Whither arrested her after warning her several times.
