

LET'S TRY DICTATORSHIP

Some will see red when they see this theme, because whenever the word is used they think of Hitler and his Nazism. So we had better use a word less offensive. Government control is the word generally used in this country. National Tutorship conveys the idea very nicely, it sounds better too.

Then it is just as well to avoid another prejudice too, as some may think of the writer as a Communist or possibly an exponent of the C.C.F., that is not true either. He is just an ordinary citizen thinking of the future of our country, one who wants to see the greatest good for the greatest number.

During the war the governments of the Empire have exercised a limited control of all phases of national life in order that the country may wage maximum war effort. All of us must agree that this was a wise move. Of course some people complain of governmental interference, but without it we would have lost the war.

Then a policy that unites a country for winning a war could be wisely adopted to enable that country to attain its fullest development, and satisfy the needs of the greater number. If the government supervised every phase of national life after the war as it does now many of the war evils will be avoided. In fact it would be better if the country was more strictly supervised.

Until people become more unselfish, and more considerate of others, permanent supervision under the watchful eye of an opposition is the better form of government. The average person is not capable of real freedom. If we would keep it then we must make the government the guardian of it.
