

It is simply the next logical step to assume that sooner or later all such springs will finally become cold. Whether by that time we shall need to requisition their curative properties or whether science will have devised means of artificially reproducing such waters, are thoughts which it appears unprofitable to follow.

But certain it is that great benefit results to patients treated at the Thermal springs and that such springs are a most valuable asset to any country.

