

PREFACE

HERE is scarcely a habitable corner of the world where McGill men or women are not to be found. Everywhere they are "carrying on,"—with the training which they acquired at their Alma Mater as their greatest asset. The fame of McGill men is something which is common to the entire body of graduates. The object of this booklet is not an attempt to portray McGill's great men; it is simply to point out representative men in different callings—Arts, Law, Medicine, Science, Education, Business, Politics, the Church, the Army, etc,—in order that the public may the more readily realize something of what the great University is doing for the country.
