Ceylon Tea
Mountain Grown

Grand Mogul Tea is a product of the sunniest mountain tops in Ceylon. Prepared by machinery from plantation to teapot, it is the beverage of hygiene.

No exposure to store dust or microbes—the packages lined with air-tight paper bring it to you in the nicest possible condition. Insist on your dealer supplying you with this, the best possible blend of the finest and ripest teas. Discriminating housekeepers prefer it to bulk teas of doubtful value.

POET WILLIAM MORRIS

APPRECIATION OF THE GREAT CRAFTSMAN AND SOCIALIST.

His Fame in Literature Will Be Aristocratic in Two Distinct Respects—An Anomalous Fact When the Democratic Nature of His Literary Ideals is Considered—His Work in Making Common Things Beautiful.

Nine years have passed since William Morris' death, and it is not perhaps overbold to predict the way in which he will come to be regarded by the new generations which must pass judgment on the old reputations. It is already sufficiently evident that his fame in literature will be aristocratic both as regards the restricted limits of its scope and as regards the refinement of taste which the appreciation of his prose and verse demands. This fact is in itself anomalous, when we consider the democratic nature of Morris' literary ideals. Then as regards art, we must recognize the fact that his significance lay chiefly in the impulse which he gave towards the creation of beautiful things, and towards a healthier conception of the part which beauty should play in the everyday life of the people. He was not, apart from literature, in any high sense a craftsman, but an inspired and zealous craftsman, with strong and often sane convictions, which he had force enough to impress upon his generation.

What interests one most deeply in Morris is the ease and mastery with which he passed continually from one absorbing occupation to another, and therewith the unity of purpose and the rugged sincerity which underlay this apparent diversity. We know him first as a boy at Marlborough College whetting his curiosity on the Roman and pre-Celtic remains of that district, and gathering those impressions of natural beauty which pass into a gleaming thread through the prose and verse of his mature years. Oxford, about whose grey towers something still lingered of the enchantment of the middle ages, stimulated his interest in architectural beauty, a love that was deepened until it became a passion by his journeys on foot among the Gothic cathedrals of northern France. Oxford gave him, too, the inspiration of a modern habit of sentimental introspection and soul torture, which Morris so heartily loathed. Prolific these poems doubtless are, and deficient in consequence in the intensity which strikes the heart of any other author in a period of medieval worship, both sham and sincere. His narrative poems, which contain almost all the really great stories of the world, were a reaction against the habit of the middle ages, and a timely one, against the lesser poet. But Morris never wrought without a purpose, and the dearth in his poems of those splendidly isolated phrases which are dear to the quoter's heart, was part of this conscious purpose. He felt that modern poetry had become too literary, and that the skill of the modern poet was devoted to the over-elaboration of individual passages, with a consequent loss of spontaneity, and with a frequent sacrifice of that unity of impression which a perfect poem, like a perfect picture, should convey. Morris is not, therefore, a poet of purple patches. Although never a careless artist I am convinced that he would have preferred to lapse into occasional roughness and naive incoherence rather than produce a phrase so ineffectual of literature as, for example, "Tears of the Orient o'er my sphere in sphere."

Discussion of Morris' poetry, to be wholly satisfactory, cannot fail to deal with some of the question that I have touched upon, and Miss Cary's treatment of Morris' poetry glances off the surface of the subject. However, she never fails to interest us, and her estimate of Morris in his many capacities is far from superficial. In conclusion I may say that I do not know any book more likely to stimulate an interest in Morris, or more reliable in the picture which it presents of this many-sided man. Prof. Peckham Edgar, in Toronto Globe.

MORE DEADLY THAN FAMINE.
Neglected catarrh sooner or later causes consumption, which destroys more human beings than famine and war combined. The way "Catarrh-zone" cures catarrh is very simple; it first kills the germs that cause the irritation; then by soothing away the congestion and inflammation it cures the discharge, hawking and dropping in the throat. "I suffered so continually from nasal catarrh," writes Ernest B. Dakin, of Rosemont, "that I scarcely knew what it was to be free from headache, and pain over the eyes. Catarrh-zone relieved me at once and made a thorough cure." No other remedy cures like "Catarrh-zone"—try it for your next cold.

MESSRS. C. C. RICHARDS & CO.
Gentlemen,—My neighbor's boy, 4 years old, fell into a tub of boiling water and got scalded fearfully. A few days later his legs swelled to three times their natural size, and broke out in running sores. His parents could get nothing to help him till I recommended MINARD'S LINIMENT, which, after using two bottles, completely cured him, and of course of several other cases around here almost as remarkable, cured by the same Liniment, and I can truly say I never handled a medicine which has had as good a sale or given such universal satisfaction.

get really poor. It was to the peculiar union of the ideal and the practical in his nature that his success in the fields of which he ventured is due. In the intervals of this exacting yet joyous labor at various handicrafts, which embraced, apart from the general management of the business, innumerable experiments in dyeing, weaving, embroidery and stained glass, Morris found time to produce poetry which in its extent and in its strikingly original quality took high rank in a period when poetry was both abundant and powerful. These poems can never be in an age not wholly alive to poetry, popular, nor in an age not wholly dead to poetry can they be neglected. Two things especially command attention in Morris' poetical work: first, the devout and racy medievalism of the early pieces, and, secondly, in his greater period, the story-telling quality. All modern attempts in the medieval manner must perform be factitious, and in his poetry no more than in his decoration can it be said that Morris recaptured the spirit of the middle ages. But the inspiration which he drew from the thirteenth century and from the art already tinged with self-consciousness of Chaucer's century was more vital and unaffectedly genuine than in the case of any other author in a period of medieval worship, both sham and sincere. His narrative poems, which contain almost all the really great stories of the world, were a reaction against the habit of the middle ages, and a timely one, against the lesser poet. But Morris never wrought without a purpose, and the dearth in his poems of those splendidly isolated phrases which are dear to the quoter's heart, was part of this conscious purpose. He felt that modern poetry had become too literary, and that the skill of the modern poet was devoted to the over-elaboration of individual passages, with a consequent loss of spontaneity, and with a frequent sacrifice of that unity of impression which a perfect poem, like a perfect picture, should convey. Morris is not, therefore, a poet of purple patches. Although never a careless artist I am convinced that he would have preferred to lapse into occasional roughness and naive incoherence rather than produce a phrase so ineffectual of literature as, for example, "Tears of the Orient o'er my sphere in sphere."

TELEPHONE INVESTIGATION.

W. F. Maclean Asks That Evidence Go to House—Nova Scotia System.
Ottawa, May 3.—W. F. Maclean wanted the Telephone Committee to refer the evidence they had taken to the House and deal with the subject. It was, however, decided not to do so until the Bell people and the railway companies had been heard.

Mr. Winfield, manager of the Nova Scotia Telephone Co., was examined at the Telephone Committee yesterday. He said that there was a telephone to every 74 persons in the Province. There were about 20 companies operating in the Province. The Nova Scotia Telephone Co. was about 18 years old. It had about 3,260 instruments, and its central was independent of the Bell company. It was paying six per cent. dividend and adding $10,000 to reserve fund. The farmers in Nova Scotia did not use telephones. The company tried the experiment at Pictou. Some twelve farmers joined to together to pay for one telephone, and the company, finding it was giving a whole district telephone service for some $60, gave it up. The farmers could maintain their own service more cheaply. In reply to Johnston (Cape Breton), the witness said that the Bell company held 14 per cent. of the stock of the Nova Scotia Telephone Co., and had two directors on a board of seven. The Provincial Government controls the rates in Nova Scotia. It was decided to summon Mayor Crow of Sydney to explain the telephone conditions in that region.

Mr. Heber Young, St. Joseph's Island, Lake Huron, was also examined. Until last year the local company on the island had connection with a company on the mainland. The Bell bought the mainland company and had shut off the island company from its connection.
