

An official French photograph of a soldier touching off a trench bomb thrower. These simple devices differ little from the "home-made" cannons boys make from a piece of steel pipe.

The wheeled litter now being used by French ambulance corps to remove wounded men from the fire zone to the field dressing stations. The photo shows first aid being administered right in the trenches by Red Cross men.

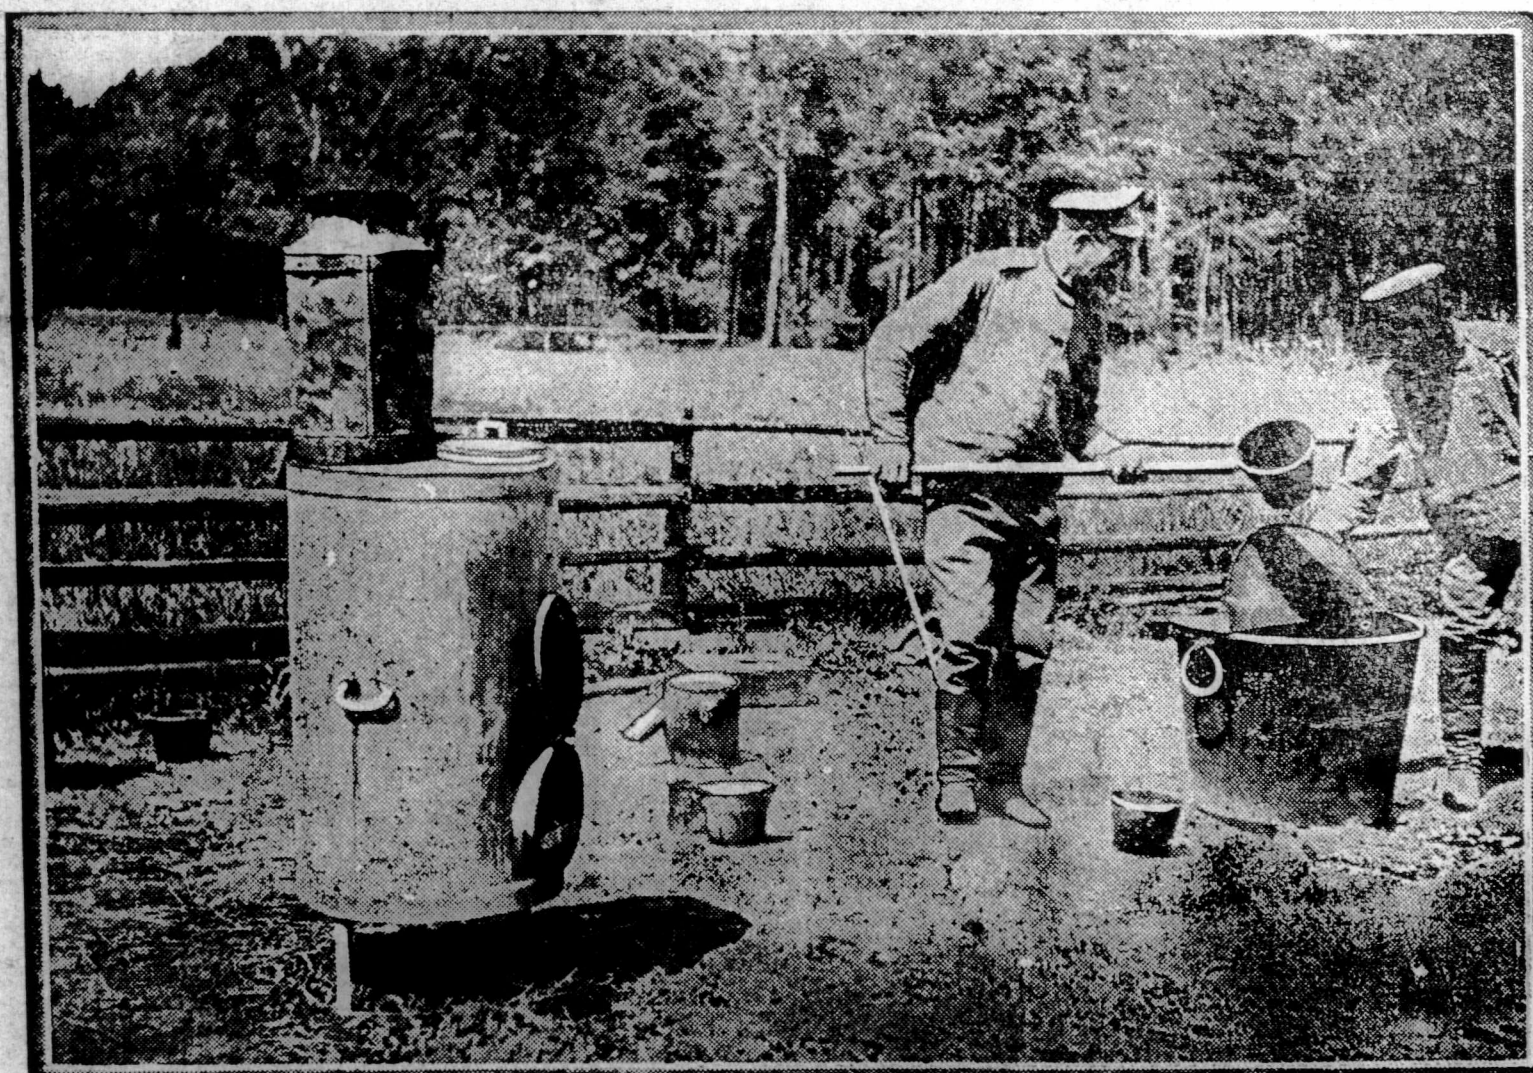

Aluminum rings made from the skeleton frames of wrecked Zeppelins, and German shell fuses are all the rage in Europe. The photo shows a convalescent Tommy making a number of these rings.

Showing the new steel helmets which the French authorities announced a few weeks ago would displace the former cap, and which have even now become common in the trenches of the legions of France.

Bells from Warsaw churches being taken down by Russian soldiers for removal into the interior lest they be fed by the city's captors into the hungry maw of Krupp's furnaces.

The first Russian field photo received by The Western Standard since the retreat from Warsaw shows a simple field kitchen being used by a couple of soldiers to make soup for their company.

I WISH I
GOING TO
FANCY DR
PARTY
WITH DUST

I DON'T BEL
THAT'S A L
HAS FEATH
IT DOES N
LIKE IT W
A LAMB

