Spheroidal Spectacles

AND EYE GLASSES
ARE the best for the preservation of the sight, and took the medal at the Centennial Exhibition.
The lenses are made of the best material, uniform in density, and of high refractive power, their perfect polish and spheroidal shape adapt them to ease and improve the sight of the wearer. The eye being the most delicate organ, great care should be exercised in selecting spectacles; it is not enough that the glasses be of the right focus, but the lenses must be perfectly centered and in many cases perfect relief is only given by having each eye fitted separately. To effect this the lenses are made interchangeable, and having an instrument to measure the sight, a perfect fit is guaranteed.
Call and examine before purchasing any other kind.

IVANHOE.

(BY SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.)
CHAPTER VII.

Before each pavilion was suspended the shield of the knight by whom it was occupied, and beside it stood his squire, quietly disguised as a salvage or silvanian, or in some other fantastic dress, according to the taste of his master, and the character he was pleased to assume during the game. The central pavilion, as the place of honor had been assigned to Brian de Bois-Guilbert, whose renown in all games of chivalry, no less than his connection with the knights who had undertaken this Passage of Arms, had occasioned him to be eagerly received into the company of the challengers, and even adopted as their chief and leader, though he had so recently joined them. On one side of his tent was pitched those of Reginald Front-de-Bœuf and Richard de Malvoisin, and on the other of the partitions, and the whole was the pavilion of Hugh de Grandmesnil, a noble baron in the vicinity, whose ancestor had been Lord High Steward of England in the time of the Conqueror, and his son William Rufus, Keith de Vipont, a knight of St. John of Jerusalem, who had been a member of the Order in a place called Heather, near Assby-de-la-Zouche, occupied the fifth pavilion. From the entrance into the lists, a gently sloping passage, ten yards in breadth, led up to the platform on which the tents were pitched. It was strongly secured by a palisade on each side, as was the esplanade in front of the partitions, and the whole was guarded by men-at-arms.

The northern access to the lists terminated in a similar entrance of thirty feet in breadth, at the extremity of which was a large enclosed space for such knights as might be disposed to enter the lists with the challengers, behind which were placed tents containing refreshments of every kind for their accommodation, with armorers, farriers, and other attendants in readiness to give their services wherever they might be necessary.

The exterior of the lists was in part occupied by temporary galleries, spread with tapestry and carpets, and accommodated with cushions for the convenience of those ladies and nobles who were expected to attend the tournament. A narrow space, betwixt these galleries and the lists, gave accommodation for yeomanry and spectators of a better degree than the mere vulgar, and might be compared to the pit of a theatre. The prominent multitude arranged themselves upon large banks of turf prepared for the purpose, which, aided by the nature of the ground, enabled them to overlook the galleries, and obtain a fair view into the lists. Besides the accommodation which these stations afforded, many hundreds had perched themselves on the branches of the trees which surrounded the meadow; and even the steeples of a country church, at some distance, was crowded with spectators.

It only remains to notice respecting the general arrangement of this gallery in the very centre of the eastern side of the lists, and consequently exactly opposite to the spot where the shock of the combat was to take place, was raised higher than the others, more richly decorated, and graced by a sort of throne and canopy, on the top of the royal arms were emblazoned. Squires, pages and yeomen in rich liveries, waited around this place of honor, which was designed for Prince John and his attendants. Opposite to this royal gallery was another, elevated to the same height, on the western side of the lists; and more gaily, if less sumptuously decorated, than that destined for the Prince himself. A train of pages and of young maidens, the most beautiful who could be selected, gaily dressed, in fancy habits of green and pink, surrounded a throne decorated in the same colors. Among pennons and flags bearing wounded hearts, burning hearts, bleeding hearts, bows and quivers, and all the commonplace emblems of the triumphs of Cupid, a blazoned inscription informed the spectators that this seat of honor was designed for La Reine de la Beauté et des Amours. But who was to represent the Queen of Beauty and of Love on the present occasion no one was prepared to guess.

Meanwhile spectators of every description thronged forward to occupy their respective positions, and not without many quarrels concerning those out many they were entitled to hold. Some of these were settled by the men-at-arms with brief ceremony; the shafts of their battle-axes and pinnacles of their swords, being readily employed as arguments to convince the refractory. Others, which involved the claims of more elevated persons, were determined by the heralds or by the two marshals
