The Broken Circle!

CHAPTER LI.

"I will judge him myself," she said; and then slowly in her own mind she went over the past, beginning with the first hour that she had met him and ending with the previous evening, when he had parted from her with a pale, worn face, as though life had little brightness for him. Not one circumstance escaped her memory. She recalled the little incident at the Royal Academy, when, referring to the face that she had thought like Hettie's, he had said, "It has the tenderness that yours lacks." Time went by unheeded. She forgot everything in the world but the task she had set herself; and each fact, each memory, as it came home to her, brought with it confirmation of the truth.

At last, with white, tearless face and with clinched hands, she fell upon her knees with a bitter cry.

"It is all true," she moaned; "every word is true!"

How long she knelt in the glare of the frelight she never knew; but it was the sound of the dressing-bell that at length aroused her. She stood up then, with a scared look on her face.

"I must live through it!" she said. "I must meet my uncle, and smile as though nothing were wrong; I must dress, talk, meet him who was my lover; I must go to see Hettie, with this sharp, bitter pain at my heart."

CHAPTER LII.

A month had elapsed since the fatal day on which Leah had read her father's letter. She had made up her mind now how to act. The doctors had agreed that Hettie would not recover until she had had change of air, and it was arranged that, when the first breath of warm weather came, the family were to go to the south of France. The Duke and Duchess of Rosedene were already settled there, so that there would be a "home party" after all. There had been some mention of the wedding. Leah's beautiful face had paled, and a wistful look had come into her eyes. She said that the wedding must be delayed; there could be no thought of marriage when Hettie was in such a fragile state of health. She spoke calmly, and smiled

Increases the action of the intestines

Hundreds of men and women have already found freedom from laxatives by eating Fleischmann's fresh yeast.

Doctors are now agreed that proper elimination of waste matter should be brought about by food. Our doctor comes right out and states plainly that the indispensable use of cathartics is one of the causes of constipation.

Physicians all over the country are recommending Fleischmann's fresh yeast because it is a fresh food, rich in those elements which keep the intestines healthy. In one series of tests, some normal functions were restored in from 3 days to 5 weeks.

Try it out for yourself. Begin today by adding two or three of Fleischmann's Yeast to your everyday diet. Keep it up and see how normally and regularly your intestines act. Be sure it's Fleischmann's Yeast—the familiar tin-foil package with the yellow label. Place a standing order with your grocer.

As the days passed, she grew thinner and paler, and her eyes brighter. She never sang. She had never touched her piano since the reading of the fatal letter. Her interest in everything was dead—she spent more time before the picture of Ghone than in any other place. The terrible repression told upon her. If she could have spoken of her loss, if she could have eased her heart by a flow of passionate tears, it would have been better. But there was no such relief; it was all speechless, dark, unchanging sorrow. Great silent woe looked out of the dark eyes.

"I wonder," she said to herself, "if I have accurately measured my strength."

All the arrangements were made for the journey; the Duke and Duchess of Rosedene were awaiting anxiously the arrival of the sisters, when a complication arose. The member for the county had died suddenly, and this brought about the very opening for which Sir Basil had longed. He was determined to contest the election; to secure his seat in Parliament, and then to make for himself fame, and the name of a statesman. He was born for it; politics were his vocation. This was an opportunity not to be lost. With some exertion, and the help of Sir Arthur Hatton, he felt sure of success. Of course he could not accompany the sisters, as had been arranged, to France, so it was decided that Sir Arthur should take them thither and remain for a day or two, and then return at once to help with his canvass.

The news affected the sister differently. Hettie had dreaded the journey with Sir Basil, yet had not liked to raise any objection. Leah had told herself that she should take her last look at his beloved face on English soil. She made no remark when Sir Arthur told her of the change in their plans; and he was blind enough to think that her silence arose from some little resentment against her lover—so little idea had any one of the true facts of the case. They thought Leah very quiet for some days after that. Who could guess that in her own mind she was bidding adieu to the place she loved so well?

Once she asked Sir Arthur to drive her over to Glen—Sir Basil had gone to London on business. The general was delighted at the request; he rejoiced to think that Leah took so great an interest in the improvements.

As he drove her along the road he jested with her and teased her, he did not notice that she lay by his side, cold and pale as a marble statue with such an expression of bitter pain on her face as would have startled even a stranger. She was going to say good-bye to the beautiful house that would never be her home now. She wanted to look once more on the lavish decorations, at the rooms prepared for her, which she would never use. She tried to picture Hettie there—Hettie, with her sweet face and golden hair, who would be so well suited to this dainty, picturesque home; and she wondered as she went through the rooms, whether, when Basil was established there, with Hettie as his wife, he would think of her; whether any idea would come to him of her suffering or of her broken heart.

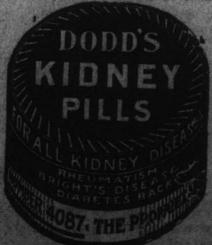

"You look very tired and ill, Leah," said the general, in deep concern. "He had caught a sight of her as she came from the room that was to have been her boudoir, and she was of her guard. He was shocked at the white face and the dark, haggard eyes. He kissed her lovingly.

"My dear Leah, what is the matter? Is there anything more than fatigue?" She raised her brave face to his; he never forgot the look or the voice, and said,—

"No, there is nothing wrong; and I have done nothing which could tire me."

She looked round for the last time upon a scene that she was never to see again; and, as she drove back, she felt that the pain at her heart could never be sharper.

Supreme as a Gift— A compliment to any bride

HOLMES & Edwards Silverware is a gift which combines rare, enduring beauty with years of faithful service; it is a superb compliment to any bride.

The veritable glitter of precious gems—radiance of unusual beauty—that is the charm the exclusive Holmes & Edwards hand-burnished lustre will bring to her table.

And Holmes & Edwards yields the lasting satisfaction which comes only from the generous use of sterling silver. It is sterling silver's only competitor for wear.

In SILVER-INLAID, solid blocks of pure silver are set in on the back of the bowl and handle before plating, and in SUPER-PLATE, a heavy extra plating of silver is given to protect these points against wear.

High-class jewellers will show you the beautiful Jamestown Pattern, strikingly simple and artistic—as well as table appointments such as flower baskets, casseroles, pie plates, cake and bread trays—of the same high quality.
