

A Message to the Boys

If you have a girl worth while,
Buy her Schrafft's.
If you want to see her smile
Till she laughs,
Buy the purest, sweetest sweet,
Buy her Schrafft's in boxes neat;
Make your victory complete,
Buy her Schrafft's.

If she has another beau,
Buy her Schrafft's.
She will then know who to stow
On the raft.
Schrafft's will always break the ice;
It will win 'em in a trice;
Worth a million times the price;
Buy her Schrafft's.

If her mother hangs around,
Feed her Schrafft's.
She will then with love abound,
And she'll pass.
For your judgment she can trust,
And she knows her daughter must
Love a guy who blows his dust
Buying Schrafft's.

BRITAIN'S FOOD SUPPLY.

LONDON, Aug. 3. The estimates of the Department of Agriculture were adopted in the Commons without division. In the course of the debate Lloyd George suggested that a systematic survey of the country's agricultural resources be made and declared that last year Britain imported £380,000,000 worth of food, while this country was capable of producing £67,000,000 worth more of meat, butter, eggs and other dairy products last year than we did in 1913 after allowing for the changed value, said Lloyd George. He said that while Britain could produce the best quality cattle she had gone back in this respect, while other western countries had increased their production considerably.

The Horn Tooters Nuisance

The city of Detroit has passed a by-law providing penalties for motorists who unnecessarily disturb the peace by using their auto horns too frequently, which causes the Detroit Examiner to remark that "of all the irritating pests that modern conditions have produced the 'horn-blower' is probably the most obnoxious. He drives up to a house in a quiet neighborhood, and instead of getting out and quietly informing people that he has arrived he proceeds to play a solo on his loudspeaker."

And the longer he has to wait the louder and longer he toots, until his departure leaves behind frayed nerves, awakened babies and a homicidal complex that suggests the desirability of having a sawed-off shotgun ready for his next visit.

Another place he favors is a traffic jam where, heedless of the fact that the drivers in front of him cannot proceed, he insultingly tootles away on his horn until the front rankers have to fight against an impulse to go back and grab the Klaxon by stuffing the driver into it.

"We have plenty of horn-tooters here, and unless the example of Detroit is followed some citizen whose nerves have been strained to the breaking point is liable to declare an open season and go gunning for the worst of the offenders."

And a jury of married men whose offspring have been awakened night after night would not have to leave the court room to reach a verdict of justifiable homicide.

Halifax has more than enough of this intolerable nuisance. There is

Regatta Musings on the Past

The scenes I cherished,
Have all long perished,
Those which I loved on Regatta Day,
By the lake I sported,
Those scenes I courted,
With youthful fervour, are passed away.

Since then great changes,
In times ranges,
Have taken place, for in foreign climes
Some are dwelling,
Some here are telling,
Regatta joys of the good old times.

"Once more I'm glancing,
With thoughts entrancing,"
On all the pleasure I once loved there,
The lomp I stood in,
The dizzy puddle,
The fat crubeens, and the sweet spruce beer.

The bread bag races,
All the "hard cases"
Who laid their pennys at Bacchus Shrine,
No melancholy,
Young maidens jolly,
In modest dresses they all looked fine.

The greasy pole there,
It was the goal there,
Where many gathered a prize to get,
Where boots were "hung on,"
Or a ham was "strung on,"
They way they got them, I smile at yet.

The sturdy rowers,
No boasting "blowers,"
All strong of muscle, grit and skill,
In the queen of beauty,
They did their duty,
The Hawk and Myrtle and Lady Hill.
But it's now all over,
Yet I shall hover,

O'er those old scenes which made me feel gay,
At the place I courted,
And where I sported,
With boyish glee, on Regatta Day.

"Billy Breeze, Billy Breeze,
I have skinned my eight poor knees,"
Cried Daddy Longlegs, who's been blown
Up against the hard fence stone.

"And now I hope, Little Readers, you remember what happened in the last story. But in case you have forgotten, I'll remind you that poor Daddy Longlegs had been blown by mischievous Billy Breeze against the Old Stone Fence.

"Dear, Oh dear," sighed the old gentleman insect, "how am I to get to the shoemaker? I can't stand up in this terrible wind, much less walk. Dear, Oh dear!"

"I've thought of a way," shouted the little rabbit, just like that, quick as the breeze on the first of the month.

"Tell me," gasped breathless Daddy Longlegs from the chink in the Old Stone Fence.

"Crawl into my knapsack," laughed the bunny boy, and slipping it off his back, he undid the straps and opened the cover.

"Gracious me!" exclaimed the old insect, looking in. "It's half full of lollypops. They'd bump me to pieces." "I'll put them in my pockets," answered the little rabbit. As soon as the knapsack was emptied and Daddy Longlegs had hopped in off went the bunny boy on the pathmobile to the little dwarf shoemaker in the Fairy Bunny Forest. Up hill and down dale rolled the rubber-tired wheel until by and by, quite a way, weary-legged and dusty-grey, the little rabbit stopped at the tiny hut in which the little shoemaker lived. There at the open window he sat on a little wooden bench stitching a shoe.

"Hello, hello!" cried the little rabbit, slipping the knapsack off his back, "I've brought you a customer."

"Where is he?" asked the little dwarf shoemaker, looking here and there and everywhere, but in vain. There was no one in sight, except a tiny ant that was hurrying home to
