Sources of Embarrassment.

The report of the committee stated that chapter 3, section 3, and sec-tion 4, of the Presbyterian Confession of Faith, were "sources of embar-rassment," and not regarded as essential.

The Presbyterian Creed.

The threatened dispute over Dr Hillis' resignation out of the way however, the Presbytery, by a unani-mous vote, adopted resolutions in-troduced by Dr. Herrick Johnston, president of McCormick Theological Seminary, overturing the General As Semilary, overturning the General As-sembly to appoint a committee to re-port on the general question of the Presbyterian creed. The resolutions were as follows: "In view of the widespread mis-understanding of what the things are that are more emply believed to our understanding of what the things are that are most surely believed by our beloved Presbyterian Church; end "In view of the Archaic forms in which some of the doctrines of our church have expression in the his-

The fete had been prolific of dreams. Reality had not yet touched all those tired young eyes with her disillusioning wand

Olivia still dreamed of her short and wondrous reign as absolute sovereign. For a whole radiant evening she had been exalted to a princess royalship. All of her small world had done her willing homage, and the pretty thing had queened it right graciously.

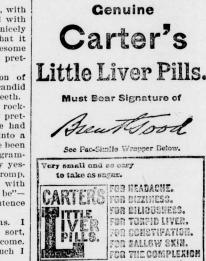

Clarence Westover dreamed of a girl who to the most winning manners, loveliest face and brightest of minds added the comfortable allurements of substantial wealth. The Westover coffers needed replenishing, and Clarence was the hope of the family.

The last of the Broxtons dreamed of the girl he loved and of the pleasure it would be to him to bestow upon her in perpetuity the old home, with all its goodly furniture, his all, which had afforded such a fit setting for her fresh young beauty that night. It had been arranged before his guardian had left him that he was to dine at the cottage that day. Jess could furnish him some sort of break-fast, he had said, preferring not to intrude upon Ollie's much needed rest too early.

While waiting next morning for Jess fulfill her promise in this respect he had had waking visions, pleasant visions, which had ministered to his innocent vanity and made him rejoice for the first time with a frankly imper sonal pleasure in his possession of great wealth.

For a fellow all alone in the world, he told himself magnificently, houses and lands mattered little, but for her sweet sake, the soft, dimpled darling, he rejoiced that there were no roughs to be smoothed away, no dreary waiting to be imposed, no howling of the wolf to be dreaded.
