"No," said Paul in a broken voice, for as the threat was, he could not afford to despise it after his experiences of the stone's power. "I was joking, Dick; at least, I didn't mean it. I know, of course, I'm helping you. You've got the best of it. I'm in. I won't interfere with you. There's only one thing I ask. You won't try any more experiments with that miserable stone. You'll promise me that at least."

"Yes," said Dick, "it's all right. I'll play fair. As long as you behave yourself and back me up I won't touch it. I only want to stay as I am. I don't want to lose it."

"You won't lose it?" said Paul, anxiously. "Couldn't you lock it up that fastening don't look very safe."

"It will do well enough," said Dick. "I got it done at the watchmaker's, round the corner from here. But I'll have a stronger ring put in somewhere, if I think of it."

There was a pause in which the conversation about to flag hopelessly, but at last Dick said, almost as if he felt some compulsion for his present unfeeling attitude. "Now, you know, it's much better to take things quietly. It can't be altered now, can it? And it's not such bad fun being a boy after for some time. You'll get it by and by, if you don't, and be jolly as a sandbar. We shall get along all right together, too. I shan't be hard on you. It isn't my fault that you happen to be at this particular school. You chose it. And after this term you can go to any other school you like—Eton or Rugby, or anywhere. I don't mind the expense. Or, if you'd rather, you can have a private tutor. And I'll buy you a pony and you can ride in the Row. You can have a much better time of it than I ever had, as long as you let me go on my own way."

But these dazzling bribes had no influence on Mr. Bultitude; nothing short of complete restitution would ever satisfy him, and he was too proud and too angry at this crushing defeat to even pretend to be in the least pacified.

"I don't want your pony," he said, bitterly. "I might as well have a white elephant, and I don't want to enjoy myself much more at a public school than I do here. Let's have no humbug, sir. You're up and I'm down—there's no more to be said—I shall tell the doctor nothing, and I warn you that if ever the time comes—"

"Oh, of course," said Dick, feeling tolerably secure, now he had disposed of the main difficulty. "If you can turn me out, I suppose you will—that's only fair. I shall take care not to give you the chance. And, oh, I say, do you want any tin? How much have you got left?"

Paul turned away his head, lest Dick should see the sudden exultation he knew it must betray, but he was not without an effort to appear unconcerned. "I came away with exactly five shillings and I haven't a penny now."

"I say," said Dick, "you are a fellow who must have been going through an effort to get rid of it all in a week."

"It went, as far as I can understand, in rabbits and mice," said Mr. Bultitude. "Some boys claimed it as money they paid you to get them. I believe."

"All your ownings," said Dick, "you would have them drowned. But you'd better have some tin to get along with. How much do you want? Will half a crown do?"

"Half a crown is not much, Dick," said his father, almost humbly. "It's—ahem—a handsome allowance for a young fellow like you," said Dick, rather unkindly; "but I haven't any half-crowns left. I must give you this, I suppose."

And he held out a sovereign, never dreaming what it signified to Paul, who clutched it with feelings too great for words, though gratitude was not a part of them, for was it not his money?

"And now," said Dick, "I hear Grim. Remember what I told you; keep it up."

Dr. Grimstone came in with the air of a man who has a painful duty to perform; he started slightly as he eyed the change in his visitor's dress and appearance. "I hope," he began gravely, "that your son has spared the pain of going into the details of his behavior; I wish, I could give you a better report of him."

Dick was plainly in spite of his altered circumstances, by no means at ease in the schoolmaster's presence; he stood, shifting from foot to foot on the hearthrug, turning extremely red as he constantly declined to raise his eyes from the ground.

"Oh, ah," he stammered at last, "you were just going to smack him, weren't you, when I turned up, sir?"

"I found myself forced," said the doctor, slightly shocked at this coarse way of putting things, "forced to contemplate administering to him (for his ultimate benefit) a sharp corrective in the presence of his schoolfellows. I dis like you, but the truth must be told. He has no doubt confessed his fault to you?"

"No," said Dick, "he hasn't though. What's he been up to now?"

"I had hoped he would have been more open, more straightforward when confronted with the father who has proved himself so often indulgent and anxious for his improvement; it would have been a more favorable symptom, I think. Well, I must tell you myself. I know well what a shock it will be to your scrupulously sensitive moral code, my dear Mr. Bultitude."

Dick showed a painful inclination to giggle here. "But I have to break to you the melancholy truth that I detected this unhappy boy in the act of conducting a secret and amorous correspondence with a young lady in a sacred edifice."

Dick whistled sharply. "Oh, I say," he cried, "that's bad" (and he wagged his head reproachfully at the disgusted father, who longed to denounce his hypocrisy, but dared not), "that's bad. . . he shouldn't do that sort of thing, you know, should he? At his age, too, the young dog."

"This horror is what I should have expected from you," said the doctor, thought he was in truth more than scandalized by the composure with which his announcement was received.

"Such boldness is indeed characteristic of the dog, an animal which, you are aware, was with the ancients a synonym for shamelessness. No boy, however abandoned, should hear such words of unequivocal condemnation from a father's lips without a pang of shame."

Paul was only just able to control his rage by a great effort.

"You're right there, sir," said Dick; "he ought to be well ragged for it. . . like this, the young beggar. But he mustn't be too hard on him, eh? After all, it's nature, you know, isn't it?"

"I beg your pardon," said Dr. Grimstone, very stiffly.

"I mean exclaimed Dick, with a perilous approach to digging the other in the ribs, "we did much the same sort of thing in our time, eh? I'm sure I did lots of times."

"I can't reproach myself on that head, Mr. Bultitude, and I permit me to say, that such a tone of treatment is apt to destroy the effect, the excellent moral effect, of your most impressively conveyed indignation just now, merely giving you a hint, you understand."

"Oh, ah," said Dick, feeling that he had made a mistake; "yes, I did mean that. But, I say, you haven't given him a whipping yet, have you?"

"I had just stepped out to procure a cane for that purpose," said the doctor, "when your name was announced."

"Well, look here, you won't want to start again when I'm gone, will you?"

"An ancient philosopher, my dear sir, was accustomed to postpone the correction of his slaves until the first glow of his indignation had passed away. He found then that he could

"Lay it on with more science," suggested Dick, while Paul writhed where he stood. "Perhaps so, but you might forgive him now, don't you think?"

"He won't do again. If he goes writing any more love-letters, tell me, and I'll lesson, you know. Let him off this time."

"I have no right to resist such an entreaty," said the doctor, "though I'm inclined to think that a few more permanent. . . consider your plea for his pardon."

Luckily he was not. "I'd rather let him off," he said, awkwardly. "I don't approve of caning fellows myself. It never did me any good. I know, and I got enough of it to tell."

"Well, well, I yield. Richard, your father has interceded for you; and I have my own view in the matter. You will hear no more of this disgraceful conduct, sir, unless you do something to recall it to my memory. Thank your father for his kindness, which you so richly deserved, and take your leave of him."

The well-read man isn't always the pink of perfection.

The pursuit of pleasure is often as dangerous to life as the pursuit of the bubble reputation even at the cannon's mouth.

Late hours, the breathing of a vitiated atmosphere, rich foods, and irregular rest, must result in a depleted vitality.

There is a feeling of languor, the appetite fails, sleep does not refresh, life loses its interest, and nervousness or hysteria may make life miserable.

The preservation of the healthful tone of the body depends chiefly on keeping the blood pure, and the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition in a condition of health.

When any of the above mentioned symptoms appear the timely use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will restore the body to a healthy equipoise. It purifies the blood, nourishes the nerves, and restores the deranged stomach and its allied organs to a condition of sound health.

There is no alcohol, whisky or other stimulant contained in "Golden Medical Discovery."

"I was troubled with very frequent headaches often accompanied by severe vomiting," writes Miss Mary Bell Summerton, of San Diego, Duval Co., Texas. "Bowels were irregular and my stomach and liver seemed continually out of order. Often I could eat almost nothing for twenty-four hours at a time. I was entirely unfit for work, and my whole system run down."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cleanse and regulate the stomach, liver and bowels. They produce permanent benefit and do not react on the system. One is a gentle laxative.

NEW YORK'S
FATAL FIREFour Lives Lost in the Chinese

$15,000 Blaze at the Soo.

New York, Nov. 6.—The fire in Mott street destroyed more lives than was at first supposed, and the loss of property is estimated at $15,000,000.

The revised list of missing is as follows: John W. Weller, superintendent of the Manhattan Bed Company; Michael Conlon, engineer; Charles Smith, packer; Max Albin, driver.

Weller, Bush and Albin were at work on the third floor. It is believed that they were suffocated. Smith and Conlon, the engineer, were in the basement.

Albert Bush, who was thought to have been lost, was found. He was with ten others on the third floor. They could not descend the stairs, and had to go to the top floor. They got up a narrow fire-escape and jumped across a space of about four feet, to the rear fire-escapes of an adjoining building.

St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 6.—A $15,000 fire occurred Saturday in the drygoods store of W. F. Ferguson & Co., on Ashmun street. An errand boy lighted a match to find a ten-cent piece he had dropped, and set fire to a bundle of cotton batting. The flames quickly spread to adjacent goods, and the interior of the store was soon ablaze.

Four streams of water came from the fire, but extinguished the fire. The fire, which started in the drygoods store, spread to the adjacent building, and the loss is estimated at $15,000.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—The American Wire and Steel Co. suffered a loss of $500,000 Saturday by the burning of a portion of the Washburn & Moen wire establishment at Waukegan, Ill. The loss is estimated at $500,000.

Fredonia, Nov. 6.—The grape season for 1899 has been the most successful in eight years. Between six and seven thousand car loads of grapes have gone to the market from Chautauqua county and have averaged the grower about forty cents a basket, bringing to them the enormous sum of over $2,400,000.

Besides this sale in the market it is estimated that over one thousand tons have been used for wine manufacture. The sale of this product will amount to $500,000. The large crop and good prices make good times in Northern Chautauqua.
