estate, partly in London and partly in America. Two attorneys-Dr. Smith, of Lon don, and Dr. Tennykieff, of New York -were appointed administrators. They advertised in various Jewish news papers for heirs.

Lonsdale's real name was Isaac Grotzenstein, of Poland. After many dventures he opened a beer shop in London, which developed into a smart restaurant. Then he assumed the name of Lonsdale, speculated on the exchange in brewery shares, and finally purchased large beer houses America, where he died.

His heirs are too poor to prove their relationship and a company has been formed to do so. The company assumes all costs and will take its payment out of the heritage. Herren, Ullman and Neuland, Berlin bankers, will go to London in October and receive the money there which was deposited in New York. In the meantime they will lay before the court proofs of the relationship of the alleged heirs. Lonsdale owned breweries in New York, Texas and Canada.
