

supplies of medicines and drugs. They are now supplied by an ordnance department. Could anything be more absurd? There should be less red tape and more latitude in the purchase of comforts for the sick. A sufficiency of transport should be always available for the sick and wounded. The orderlies should receive higher pay and be recruited more carefully. The sanitary arrangements should be more directly under control of the medical department.

These are a few of the changes which will enable the medical department to more thoroughly and efficiently carry out its work of mercy and relief. The Royal Army Medical Corps contains some of the ablest and most capable men I have ever met. It is a credit to the army and an honor to the nation.

Reprinted from The Canadian Practitioner and Review, Oct., 1900.