

of teaching he did within her walls, and the great amount of time spent otherwise, and always willingly, working for her prosperity, and of the many large classes of good students who for so many years filled her class-rooms, and by whom her extinction, as a college, is greatly regretted. No graduate worthy the name, or student, who was privileged to attend her teachings can or will ever forget the dear old College. The deserved eminence which many of her sons have attained, and the love of all her true sons, will, he trusts, for many years to come, throw very bright halos round her much loved name, which they will ever cherish when it is mentioned, as it is sure to be very often, as they recall how much she did for them in their never-to-be-forgotten student days. Doubtless the pleasant reflections will prove an inspiration, and a stimulus often while engaged in the responsible duties of their profession. Her widely scattered graduates will, he hopes, at least now and then, may be often, meet in every part of the Dominion and in the United States and elsewhere in the world where they may be, as we do to-night, to speak of their Alma Mater with an affection which no lapse of time can ever decrease. He felt justified in going one step further to say, and to hope, that the character and extent of the work of Trinity Medical College, and the acknowledged position and influence her success gave her, may have much influence in the improvement of the medical education of the future, in causing it to be made more practical than ever it has been heretofore, thus fitting the graduates sent out from the colleges of this and perhaps of other lands in future years, more fully for the exacting responsibilities which fall to the lot of all worthy members of our noble profession.
