

without any other ingredient in it than what nature put there."

"He says, "I have made use of certain ingredients before people, such as the sweat under my arm, etc., to disguise the real secret, and many believe that the docility to which the horse arrived in so short a time, was owing to these ingredients; but you see from this explanation that they were of no use whatever. The implicit faith placed in these ingredients, though innocent of themselves, becomes 'faith without work.' And thus men remained always in doubt concerning this secret. If the horse makes the least motion when you advance towards him, stop and remain perfectly still until he is quiet. Remain a few moments in this condition, and then advance again in the same slow and almost imperceptible manner. Take notice, if the horse stirs, stop without changing your position. It is very uncommon for the horse to stir more than once after you begin to advance, yet there are some exceptions. He generally keeps his eye steadfast upon you, until you get near enough to touch him on the forehead. When you are thus near to him, raise slowly, and by degrees, your hand, and let it come in contact with the part just above the
