HARDSHIPS AT RED LAKE CAMP ARE INCREASING

Provision Prices Soar; Shelter Along Route Lacking

FOOD IS SCARCE

Camp Limits Extended To Almost Eighteen Miles; Still Growing

HUDSON, Ont., March 6.—Hardships encountered by prospectors in the rush to mining camps of other days are being duplicated, in part at least, by the men who have taken the trail to the new Red Lake gold strike in Northern Ontario. Lack of shelter on the route to the district, 140 miles from here, and the sky roasting of provision prices in the mining camp itself, indicate the hardships that must be met.

40 IN ONE SHACK. He said that at Sand Lake, half way point between Hudson and Red Lake, he spent the night in a cabin that housed at the same time, 40 other men and their dogs. Of this number 18 were coming out and 24 going into the district.

Reports from Red Lake are that four is as high as 214 hundred and sugar from $25 to $80 a hundred pounds, beans around $20 a hundred and bacon and butter $1.25 and $1.50 a pound respectively. Many staple articles of food are difficult to obtain at any price. Dog feed is reported scarce.

Progress is being made in the preparation of a road to the camp on which machinery will be transported to the strike.

ROAD BROKEN

Fourteen miles of the road have been broken by teams and permanent camps are being established for the workers. The machinery necessary for preliminary development work, is expected to be in the field before the spring break up.

Scenes in the new camp as viewed from the air reveal long series of trenches which have been cut to lay bare the gold bearing rock formations, and those who have made the trip more than once have returned astonished at the speed and extent to which the prospectors have extended the limits of the camp. It now stretches irregularly for a distance of almost 18 miles, with the tents of the miners marking the points at which development work is being pressed.

WARNING OF RAIN ALARMS OIL CITY

Efforts to Break Ice Jam in Allegheny River Has Been Speeded Up

Oil City, Pa., March 6.—As disquieting reports of an approaching rainstorm out of the west reached Oil City today, efforts to dislodge the huge Brandon ice gorge in the Allegheny River were speeded up in the hope that the jam would move out before the expected rains arrived.

Prof. Howard T. Barnes, of McGill University, Montreal, continued his attack against the ice with thermite. Railroad engineers were using dynamite and nitroglycerine at the head of the gorge, blasting a channel through the solid mass. Thermite, set off last night and today, caused cracks to appear in the ice. Professor Barnes expects to use two tons of chemicals before results are obtained.

The river today continued to recede slowly. The stage this morning was 14.6 feet, the flood level. The mercury hovered in the region of zero.
