Ideals of "The Plain Man"

(From The Review.)

There is danger in identifying "the sum of human happiness" with the aggregate of the material things which are produced by human effort. It is true that if the masses were persuaded that that aggregate could be enormously increased by the abolition of private property, they would probably be impervious to all other considerations; and it is therefore of very great importance that the error of such a view be exposed. But even in the exposing of this error, it is essential that the "plain man" be treated as an intelligent human being; if you attempt to satisfy his mind by an argument that is fit only for a child, he will soon take your measure, and your last state will be worse than the first. And you will likewise underestimate his intelligence if you think that he is inaccessible to the deeper considerations that belong to the subject. You may convince him that he gets more to eat and to wear than he is likely to get under communism, and yet leave him strongly inclined to see what communism might do for him. "The full market-basket" is a good enough cry in a tariff campaign, but when it comes to the great issues of life, the "plain man" or at all events the plain American, does not like to think of himself as concerned only with his market-basket. Treat him as a man, not a proletarian; as a man to whom "the sum of human happiness" means something more than food to eat and clothes to wear. What we have in mind, however, is not those spiritual or religious or intellectual sources of happiness which are but lightly related to economic institutions; we intrude these into the discussion would be, to the plain man's mind, to draw a herring across the trail. But he will grant readily enough that the sum of the happiness that men enjoy through the acquisition of material things depends not merely on their gross quantity but quite as much on the conditions upon which they are acquired; and he is fully capable of understanding that the chance of success and the danger of failure, the necessity of self-reliance, the splendid returns which stimulate enterprise and reward sagacity or talent—that these things justify the institution of property not only because they make an increase in the total of our material possessions, but even more because the enjoyment of these possessions is infinitely greater than it could be under a system in which they were rationed out to us by a governmental machine.

ZIONIST CENTRES SELECTED.

The Zionist Organisation of America announced this week in New York that London and Copenhagen had been selected as centres through which the mass migration of Jews to Palestine will be directed. This movement, however, is not to begin until after Great Britain has assumed the mandate over the country. At London will be registered and organized those emigrants who seek the homeland from Great Britain, France, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Holland and the Balkan Peninsula, North Africa and Asia. Through Copenhagen will go those from Eastern and Central Europe and Scandinavia. A central immigration office will be established at either Jada or Haifa, which ever is made chief port of arrival. Zionist officials pointed out that the difficulty of restricting immigration to Palestine from all parts of the world is becoming an acute problem. The situation in Constantinople has become serious because of the large number of refugees from all parts of the world der a system in which they were rationed out to us by a governmental machine.
