ITALY'S TOO ZEALOUS POLICE

Mistake Historic Treasures for Bombs and Disappoint the King.

ROME, July 15.—Two spectacular looking but entirely respectable Spaniards from Barcelona, by the name of Genaro and Barza, arrived here a few days ago with a complete collection of Papal coins and a navigation chart used by Amerigo Vesputio on his voyage to America. They hoped to sell their treasures to the King.

Their appearance, coupled with the manner in which they guarded the portmanteau containing the coins and chart, excited the suspicions of the police, who were convinced that they were anarchists with a portmanteau full of bombs.

These suspicions were increased when the Spaniards went yesterday to the Quirinal to arrange for the sale of their treasures. The police allowed down on them, but they promptly furnished proofs of their respectability in the shape of letters of introduction from the Spanish Prime Minister to the Spanish Ambassador and other friends here, who vainly strove to persuade the police that they had made a mistake.

The police are determined to prevent the Spaniards from making a trip to Iacconi, where the King is waiting to see their collection.

GENERAL STRIKE HAS BEEN PROCLAIMED IN SPAIN

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain, July 15.—What promises to be a gigantic general strike throughout the North East of Spain, was begun yesterday with the declaration of a general strike at a meeting of several thousand miners at Bilbao. It is believed that the movement will spread rapidly to the mine districts of Santander and Asturias. The labor unions of the whole of Catalonia are preparing for a general strike. The authorities are alarmed at the prospects and are taking measures to assure a bread supply.

PEACE.

To the Editor of "The Star." Sir—One of our daily papers last week had a short but sincere editorial on the necessity of school training in peace principles. May I send you some extracts for the next few weeks from "Patriotism and the New Internationalism," a treatise by Mrs. Lucia Ames Mead, of Boston, who, with her husband, Mr. Edwin D. Mead, is devoting her life to this and kindred reforms. Mrs. Mead's counsel is not to be followed on this side the Atlantic for sincerity of purpose, and clearness of presentation. July 14th, 1907. PEACE.

PATRIOTISM.

Within the last ten or fifteen years, as most teachers will agree, there has been a notable increase in national self-consciousness and in that pride of race and nationality commonly called "patriotism." To use the language of the street, there has been a "boom" in patriotism. Various societies whose membership is dependent on descent from patriotic ancestors have gained vast proportions, and in many places a spirit of veneration for the flag has been developed which surpasses reverence for the Scriptures.

In schools the attention paid to patriotism is in marked contrast to that of twenty years ago. Not only is every child taught to salute the flag and pledge loyalty to it, but greater emphasis is put on all national holidays and flag day is added to the list of school celebrations. One of the best results of this new emphasis upon patriotism has been the speedier amalgamation of the immigrant child whose pride in his adopted country of ten exerts that of the native born.

When, however, one carefully inquires what our children conceive patriotism to be, and what they mean when they pledge themselves to service of country, it is not evident that a deplorable vague or even a perverted conception is often linked with that beautiful and sacred word.

If much that is obvious and usual regarding the teaching of patriotism is omitted in this brief consideration of it, the reader will understand that it is not because the writer wishes to minimize it, but because it is apparent that the best service can be performed by dwelling on those phases of the subject which usually receive too little notice.

It is not true that the word "patriot" in the minds of probably the majority is perhaps more misunderstood than any other, unless it be the word "rebel." Both have been confused with pride and prejudice; bragging and bunting and relic-hunting have been often accepted as manifestations of a genuine patriotism, with which they have no more to do than steeples and pulpit cushions and La Parze windows have to do with visiting the fatherless and widows in their affliction and keeping unspotted from the world. Pure religion and undefiled can only be tested by service, service that involves sacrifice. Pure patriotism can be evidenced only by service, a service that costs some effort, and is performed every week of the year. When admiration for ancestors who did their duty for their time does not inspire us to do our duty for our time, when we sit here in the Promised Land that flows with freedom's honey and milk, a fancy that we can take our patriotism vicariously, are we not as far from being patriots as are those who imagine the kingdom of heaven comes with observation from being soldiers of the cross? Until the idea of patriotism has become part of his mental fibre, the parent or teacher is no more fit to teach patriotism than the average high school girl is fit to teach religion. It may be safely said that the teaching of true patriotism is about as much neglected in American homes as the teaching of religion.

A child's paper, some time since, presented a picture of an old man showing a boy a gun, beneath which were written the words, "A Lesson in Patriotism." Despite the fact that during months of our history we have made no use of guns in national defense, and yet were presumably patriots all the time, the pernicious notion generally prevails that patriotism is somehow necessarily connected with the idea of killing. A teacher in Washington, D. C., reports one of her boys replying to the question, "What is patriotism?" with the prompt answer, "Killing Spaniards." In a certain little "Primer of Patriotism" which has circulated in a considerable number of schools, and which is the first question is, "What is the first position of a soldier?" Answer: "Direct, feet firmly placed, heels touching, toes spread slightly outward, the shoulders thrown back, eyes to the front." It is safe to conclude that the average child, from unconscious inference, where the first question is, "What is the first position of a soldier?"
