

CAUGHT THE WANT.
At half past ten, Jersey, four o'clock, of a fellow, pretty well under the influence of Mr. Alcohol, was observed swinging on a lamp-post on Fifth street last night. He was making quite a noisy noise to the store east post, when a guardian of the night approached him.

"Come sir, you are making too much noise," said the watchman.

"Noise? who's that?" said the fellow, and endeavored to make the intruder a sober look.

"It's me," replied the watchman, as he exposed his silver moustache to full view.

"You! and who in the—oh you? it's fair catchin', and a moshal of the bushes that are makin' all the noise?" They are a cousin, a nephew, and a son all round. It's the brothers that are a moshal of the noise. They are a hollown' sort a yelpin' and a screechin', like wild hawks, over the times, that worsens everybody but themselves. No sir, it ain't me that's makin' the noise."

"You're as tight as a brick, as well as I said, and the other fellows are as tight as that individual."

"No tight? Who said I'm tight? No sir, they aren't tight."

"Go down on Third street, on they'll tell you that money is tight. Get into their shops, an' they'll find out that it's money that's tight, not tight."

"I ain't drinkin', no sir, stranger I am, I ain't drinkin'."

"What are you makin' such a fool of yourself for, then?"

"Foot it, Sir, I'm no fool. I'm distressed. See what the contagion is. I'm afflicted."

"Are you sick?"

"What's mated with you?"

"The what?"

"The panics, sir; it's a going to carry off this town. I tried to reason with them, but it's no use."

"They're panics, more anxious than ever, tendered his sympathy, and, what was better, his aid, to the panic-stricken individuals. In the course of half an hour he had the pleasure of putting him into the door of his boarding house, and pointing out to him his best remedy—a soft bed and long winter—Cincinnati Times.

A FRENCH FORTUNE.—Mr. James Morrison, the eminent milliner, died in his country seat, Basildon Park, England, on the 30th of Oct. last, aged 68, worth £20,000,000. He went to London about 1810, and laid the foundation of his fortune by engaging in the dry-goods trade, which he was the first to introduce into this country, and afterwards increased to increase the amount of his sales. He afterwards invested largely in lands, and owned large estates in several English counties, and in Scotland. He was a self-educated man, but possessed a refined taste in literature and art, and had collected a remarkably rich library and a noble gallery of paintings.

SUMMARY JUSTICE.—Last week a young man was travelling towards Fredericton, on the St. Andrews road, and stopped at a house, where he procured lodgings for the night.

Another man named Boyle, happened to stop at the same house, and started very early for town. The first traveller, on getting up, found himself minus his overcoat and cap, and suspending Boyle of the robbery, he presented assistance and pursued him. Near Fredericton they overtook the miscreant, with the things in his possession. He was taken into custody and led through in gaol, and the next day was brought before the Mayor and two of the City Councilmen, tried, found guilty, and sentenced to one year's imprisonment in the Provincial Penitentiary.—Head Quarters.

FROM YUGOSLAVIA.—Both parties in the civil war now raging in Yugaran, are perpetrating savage excesses. The troops of the government paly spare neither men, women, or children, and are allowed to perpetrate the most abominable deeds. The revolutionaries on the other hand, liberate the prisoners in the public prisons, and put arms in their hands, receiving them into their own ranks.

STARvation IN BOSTON.—A winter of starvation is before us. Before the spring comes, some men, women and children, Bostonians, too, must die the death of Dr. Kane's dogs, a death from hunger and cold, because our melted oils of hogging for them do not, and cannot meet the present peril.—Boston Transcript.

Holmes' Ointment and Tincture.—Blisters, pinches, dry eruptions, and all irritations of the skin, often disappears after a few applications of Holmes' Ointment. In these cases brisk friction is indispensable. Many of the ordinary ointments, caused by suppressed perspiration, and as this penetrating, unguent at once removes the pores and invigorates the skin. It dissipates the indument, in a double process. Ladies whose faces are disfigured by cutaneous diseases, may safely remove the blemish and restore to the skin its natural tint, flexibility, and softness, without the use of any powerful counter-irritant. The Ointment is safe, but powerful counter-irritant. The Ointment never fails in disorders of the stomach and liver.
