YOUR BACKACHE WILL YIELD

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rockland, Maine.—"I was troubled for a long time with pains in my back and side, and was miserable in every way. I doctored until I was discouraged, and thought I should never get well. I read a testimonial about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and thought I would try it. After taking three bottles I was cured, and never felt so well in all my life. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends."

Backache is a symptom of female weakness or derangement. If you have backache, don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so safely and surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Cure the cause of these distressing aches and pains and you will become well and strong.

The great volume of unolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has restored health to thousands of women.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., writes for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge.

LETTER FROM THE LONDON WOMAN TO THE NEW ONE OF THE NICEST

Female Students to be Recognized at Oxford—Czar Had Unpleasant Experience—Favorite Games of Children.

London, Oct. 26.—Is it the thin and of the wedge? Oxford College women are at last to be recognized by the university authorities as an equal subject to university discipline. Thus the real glamour of English varsity life, the great ambition of the university girl, is to become available to women.

Hitherto the attitude which exclusive Oxford and Cambridge have taken with regard to the girl graduate has been one of lofty indifference. Last week it was announced at the Women's Worker Conference at Lincoln by a representative of St. Hugh's Hall one of the women's colleges of Oxford, that the body of rest, M. A.'s had approved of the constitution of a permanent committee for the supervision of women, and no woman student residing in Oxford will be admitted to university examinations unless her name has been entered on a register.

Registered women students will obtain definite recognition from the university during their course of study, and not merely when they are candidates for examination. The committee will consist of the vice chancellors and proctors, nine graduate members of the university and nine women, and it will control the general development of women's education in Oxford and associate women with men for that purpose.

The appointment of this committee will mark the most important advance in women's university education in the United Kingdom since the opening of Trinity College, Dublin, to women.

Czar Bobbed. The czar of Russia had a lively day at Frankfurt recently when he stopped there with his host, the grand duke of Hesse. The two royalties lunched at a hotel and then started to motor to some shops.

They had only gone a few yards when some street urchins detected the identity of the czar, and their shouts attracted a crowd, which besieged a jewelry shop in the Kaiserstrasse, where the czar sought refuge from the curiosity seekers. Finding it impossible to leave by the front door, the grand duke signaled the chauffeur to drive round by the rear door. The czar and his party thus succeeded in escaping by the back entrance before the crowd could execute the flanking movement, and they drove away at top speed to another quarter of the town.

Later, in order to make the people believe that he had already left Frankfurt, the czar remained an hour in a china shop, but news of his presence had become common property and a crowd of many hundreds took possession of the street facing the shop. Half a dozen street service men attempted to clear a way through which the czar could reach his car, but the curiosity of the people was insatiable and they refused to give way.

The grand duke, whose patience was thoroughly exhausted, shouted angrily: "Enough of this. It is time to put an end to this nuisance." Then the czar and his companions, surrounded by detectives, pushed their way by main force into the car and sped away with all possible haste. It is not likely the czar will ever care to do any shopping in Frankfurt again.

Child Games. Since the workings of a child's mind are to most grownups, mysterious and unfathomable, there is a body in England called the Child Study Society, which seeks to penetrate these mysteries. The association has been conducting an inquiry during the last two years to ascertain what games and what toys English children like best, and why.

Nine thousand forms have been distributed to school children between 3 and 13 years of age, and the results are now announced. Both with girls and boys King of Rovers was an easy first favorite among games between the ages of 3 and 6. A common reason for this preference was: "Because I like to fall down."

After that skipping for girls, came next, but the boys were strong for cricket and football and horses. In spite of rumors to the contrary, the doll remains the favorite of English girls. Second in popularity came a doll's carriage, and third, a doll's house. Boys, it seems, are much more liberal in their tastes, and go in for engines, horses, bells and magic lanterns. Books are hardly ever mentioned.

The reasons given by children were often quaint. One child volunteered the statement that "games take one's mind off unpleasant thoughts and duties." Others gave reasons such as "Keeps children from worrying their parents," or "Keeps me in good humor." Up to the age of 10 love of power was the prevailing sentiment, and reasons for preferring one toy over another took the form of an answer such as "I like to make it obey me."

Mrs. Spender Clay, daughter of W. W. Astor, is one of the few rich Anglo-Americans who lead the simple life of a country squire's wife in England. Her husband, Capt. Spender Clay, has a family place—Ford Manor—about 30 miles from London, which is probably less than 100 years old and has no historic charm and here he and his wife live 10 months of the year.

The exterior of the house is plain. It is built of low and built of yellowish brick. It stands on a knoll in a very beautiful park, but only some 10 minutes' walk from the highway, which to English people, whose ideal is to live five or six miles from their garden gate, is a grave disadvantage.

Inside the house has been beautified by Mrs. Spender Clay. The early Victorian furniture has been replaced by good examples of English, French, and Italian furniture, and the family portraits have been reframed and are wedged in between beautiful pictures.

On the garden, too, Mrs. Clay has expended much time and trouble. She has a fancy for designing her own flower beds in unusual shapes and has an eye for color. The flowers are grouped in exquisite masses, outlining even the beauty of the coloring in the royal gardens of Buckingham palace, Windsor and Hampton Court.

In the very centre of the garden is

COSTUME OF FURS AND VELVET

The demure dame drawn by the artist to display this fur-trimmed costume of velvet is NOT asleep. She just shut her eyes in modesty because so many people turned to look at the striking costume. And it was well worth looking at. The velvet and fur, of contrasting color and texture, make a most effective combination as here shown. And it's about as stylish a piece of wearing apparel as you'll see this week.

ALL RIGHT FOR WOMEN TO SMOKE Chicago, Ill., Nov. 2.—Gertrude Atherton, novel writer, said today: "Let 'em smoke," meaning the women. "Women of the better class do not object because they do it."

"Most of them, though, once they have acquired the habit, probably would like to have their license to smoke when and where they please extended. And why shouldn't they enjoy the same privilege as men in that regard?"

"I know there is a certain stogy bourgeois sentiment against smoking," she continued. "I hear that club-women and persons of that sort occasionally indulge in pious animadversions upon smoking women."

"And often some public lecturer will get up and rant and make herself ridiculous denouncing the practice but cigarette smoking is increasing rapidly in America nevertheless. And why shouldn't it? It's a pleasant pastime."

"Surely you'll not be surprised to learn that at the homes where I am entertained in New York and San Francisco cigarettes are passed to the women with their coffee as a matter of course. And wherever women have become frank and have lost their little hypercritical nerves, you find them smoking just as they drink liquors after dinner."

BELLISLE CREEK. Bellisle Creek, Nov. 2.—G. M. Thorne of Cody, who conducts a large grocery and dry goods establishment at that place, has bought the business of K. F. Goggin and will start an up-to-date establishment at this place also.

THE RENAISSANCE IN "THE LITTLE DAMOZEL"

B. V. G. Shepherd.

"The Little Damozel" is about as pleasing a title play as one could wish to see. It puts you down into the lives of our Englishmen and a wild and charming maid who sings in a cafe. One of the Englishmen is very rich and wild and with his money he keeps a theatre and orchestra running so that "The Little Damozel" may sing. He is wooing her. Rockley Pooles is a young Englishman who has gone wrong. When the rich Englishman, unexpectedly, breaks an engagement to wed "The Little Damozel" he offers Pooles $50,000 to marry "The Little Damozel". Mrs. Pooles, being that the girl loves him.

Pooles agrees and they are wed he tells her that he has inherited a fortune. They are blissfully happy in a little flat until Pooles discovers that the rich Englishman threw over "The Little Damozel" in order to marry a fine girl whom Pooles was once in love with. He tells all concerned of his disastrous bargain, saving the girl he once loved but losing "The Little Damozel".

It looks as if the life of "The Little Damozel" was ruined. She will not even go back to the cafe, where kind old "Papa," the orchestra leader, and the sunshiny girl who was once his old place. But her fortunes turn around her so that, one night, to have a place to sleep, she comes back to the little flat. It happens to be the night on which Pooles is saving farewell to his friends. He is going away. They all try to induce "The Little Damozel" to forgive him. She cannot. But suddenly a quiet, adorable little broken down girl, who has been making a living by selling insurance, takes a hand. She tells "The Little Damozel" that she has insured his life in her favor and intends to commit suicide.

"I can't get along without you," says "The Little Damozel" to Pooles at last, as she throws her arms about his neck. "I spent all my money for life insurance," he says. "I haven't got anything left."

"I don't want any more for life insurance," he says. "I haven't got anything left." "You've got me," says "The Little Damozel." "You've got me," says "The Little Damozel." Monckton Hoffe, an Englishman, wrote the piece. His characters are all odd but rather lovely Bohemians, and his comedy atmosphere that is quite different. My Buckley is "The Little Damozel" and Cyril Keightley is Pooles. The play is of the Shubert line.

A circular pond with water lilies, round it a paved walk of the yellowish brick, and round that beds of sweet-smelling flowers, masses of roses and pansies. On each side of the gates leading into the retreat is a tall terra cotta vase which Mrs. Clay brought from Italy and in which vines are growing.

The children play live simply and entertain little. They are devoted to their splendor—three little girls—and spend much of their time with them.

Captain Spender Clay, who has recently entered parliament, is a typical English squire. He appears, in his of medium build, squarely built, fair haired and pink complexioned, with a frank, honest face. Mrs. Clay is dark. It has been said that she is not in the least like an American, but she is never taken for an Englishwoman. Indeed, she is generally supposed by people who first meet her that she is French or Italian.

Ford Manor was her husband's boyhood home, and it has the additional advantage of being near her father's place. Hence, the home of the home of a country squire's wife in England. Her husband, Capt. Spender Clay, has a family place—Ford Manor—about 30 miles from London, which is probably less than 100 years old and has no historic charm and here he and his wife live 10 months of the year.
