Stade was a mative of Niagara County, this State, and when a boy became interested in the tricks of pretended meduins. He practiced table tipping and became proficient in this trick. Early in the 60's the state writing test was introduced by an English medium, and its elevertees appealed to Stade, who developed this form of deception into art. So successful was he that he imposed upon Henry Ward Beecher and the leading scientists of that day. Spiritualism was the rage in the late 60's and Stade speedily amassed a fortune. He went to England in 15'6, and created a sewsation. He performed his slate writing tricks before the royal families of Europe and was even summoned to the court at St. Petersburg. It is estimated that Slade made $1,000,000 in Europe before he met his Wellington in the person of John Nevil Maskelyne. The English conjuror denounced the American medium and announced that he could duplicate all of Stade's so-called spiritualistic wonders without any supernatural agency. Maskelyne, in his expose, showed how Slade, during a seance, made a slate move around and appear in front of those sitting in a semi-circle. During a seance with him, the spectators were compelled to sit around a table, on which they laid their hands. Slade always wore slippers and sat to the right of his audience. When all was ready the medium would slip off one slipper, which revealed a toeless stocking. He was an adept in using his toes, and would pick up the slate by them from the floor and pushing it under the table bring it up before the astonished gaze of those around him, who could not look under the table to see how it was done, because if they removed their hands from it Slade stopped his tricks. Slade's greatest trick, however.

Slade's greatest trick, however, was writing on a state, or rather making his audience believe the spirits did the writing. The hands would all be laid on the table, as in the former trick, and the medium would place his left hand with the others. In his right he held a state, both sides of which were perfectly clean. When everything was in readiness he would hold the state underneath the table. Pretty soon the scratching of a pencil would be heard and in a few moments a message from the spirit land would be ready. Slade would deftly turn the slate over and expose to view writing addressed to some one present from a loved one, who had gone to the great unknown years before. How the writing got there was a mystery to the spiritualists and they belived that spirits had a hand in it. But Maskelyne soon showed how it was done by putting a brass cap over the forefinger of his right hand. In this cap was tightly wedged a slate pencil. When all but the thumb was invisible to the audience the forefinger did the writing, and when the message was finished a rubber cord drew the brass cap up the medium's sleeve. After Mr. Maskelyne had exposed this method of surreptitiously writing "spirit" messages on a slate, Dr. Ray Laskester caught the medium in the act by grasping Slade's arms just as he was placing the slate under the table. As a result of these exposures Slade was arrested and convicted. He served three months in jail.

One of Slade's best tricks, and one which is little known, was exposed by Harry Kellar, the American magician, after it had mystiffed hundreds of investigators. This was the trick of writing on a slate perfectly clean on both sides, place another face to face with it and let a committee hold it, while he still kept his hand on a corner of it. Soon a scratching noise would be heard, and when it stopped the plates were separated, and on the surface of one of them would be found a lot of writing in chalk. This was a puzzle for a while, as the slate tee from the time all had seen its clean surface until the writing was exposed to view. But finally the solution came. It was discovered that before the slate had been shown to the audience as clean, the medium had done the writing in an invisible chemical, which could not even be detected by the committee. Just before the slates were put together the medium took a handker-chief from his pocket and carefully wiped off the surface of the one on which the writing in chemical was done. To his audience this would appear to be an extra precaution to remove any writing there might be on it. to remove any writing there might be on it. In reality, however, there was in the hand-kerchief powdered chalk, which adhered to the chemical and produced an exact imitation of chalk writing.—Rochester Post Extenses of chalk writing.—Rochester Post Extenses of the chalk writing with the chalk writing writing the chalk writing with the chalk writing writing writing with the chalk writing writing writing with the chalk writing writing writing was a supplied to the chalk writing w

A GASTRONOMIC DIFFICULTY.

In a late issue of a New England paper there appeared the following local item: "Mrs. Charles Waiters wishes to thank, through the medium of the press, her many friends for the jellies, puddings and other dainty dishes with which they fed her spark of life during her recent attack of typhoid fever. She would like to write to each of these friends individually; since that is impossible, she takes this opportunity of possible, she takes this opportunity of thanking them collectively for their kind

More I can use no other word. The ship rolled and in the distance rose a huge, balloon and in the distance rose a huge, balloon shaped mass of vapor, steam or smoke. There was not the slightest sound, but a long line, of chafing water stretched across the streaky calmness. Then the vapor settled over all and we could hear but not see the seething and pouring the seething and seething the seething t waters all around us. The captain or-dered a bucketful to be drawn up. It was hot and smelled like gas works.

"H'm," remarked the old skipper as he sniffed it. "They're poking up a new continent. I wish we were out of it."

The air grew more oppressive every moment. The vessel gave a gentle side roll and word was passed that we were aground. Over went the lead and cam up covered with blue, oozy mud. We were wallowing in sludge, the darkness was pallike and the atmosphere suffo-catingly close. Then the air was rent with reports awful to hear in that blackness. An idea of the cost of running a great nation may be gained from the state ment that England's balance sheet for the last fiscal year shows an expenditure of considerably more than three-quarters of a billion dollars. The exact amount was £151.769,000. To meet this, revenues were raised amounting to £153,707,000, leaving a surplus on hand of £1,928,000. Of this vast expenditure £66,200,000 went to the army and navy, £924,000 for dispensing justice, and £15,161,000 was spent on education. There is one entry under expenditure which reveals the magnitude of the ex pire's business. It is that for "station-ery and printing," and shows that threeery and printing," and shows that three-ery and printing," and shows that three-quarters of a million pounds was ex-pended on this item alone during the past year.—From Leslie's Weekly.
