An offending Jew was industriously paddling this stock of fancy goods at Little Glouce Bay on Wednesday, when a practical joker with an air of authority went up to him and coolly asked if he had a license to sell in this town. Upon receiving a reply in the negative, our wag took him by the arm, and taking advantage of police constable McDougall's absence, locked him up in the cell and left.
The joke cost the joker ten real silver dollars and one hour in the cell, as stated by the Jew—North Sydney Herald.

THE HOMESTEAD FARM now occupied by the Subscriber, consisting of about 30 Acres of Upland and about 20 Acres of Marsh Land, all of which is in a good state of cultivation. The location of this Farm, immediately adjoining the Public Landing and the Intercolonial Railway Station, renders it a desirable place of residence, and offers a sure and profitable investment for an intending purchaser. There is also a Lot of 20 Acres of English Marsh, with a new Barn thereon, which will be sold with the Homestead if required, which is situated one mile distant. A Wood Lot can also be purchased with the farm. The House is in good repair, is furnished with Grates, also a Wood Furnace, and with the Ell, contains fifteen Rooms. There is also a Cistern and a never-failing Well of Water on the Premises. The Barns are

Children Cry for

Pitcher's Castoria.

his brow. Hardly more than two and twenty, his clean-shaven face made him look even more youthful, and there was something almost pathetic in its incongruity with the long formal suit and ugly peaked hat. His features were good though wanting in strength, and his eyes were beautiful. "I did ask you to send me a priest," wrote Dona Apolinaria to her old friend the vicar-general at Buenos Ayres, "and you have sent me a pretty boy.
However, his manners are nice, so I will not complain." Felipe's manners were nice, a rare thing among his fraternity, and in that respect Dona Apolinaria has no fault to find with the chaplain that her friend had selected for her. It would have been difficult to find in him any other special qualifications for his post.

The estancia of Santa Paula belonged to the Usabarreras, one of the richest families of the Republic of Uruguay. At that time the family consisted of three individuals only, Don Geronimo Usabarrera, whose great wealth and influence in the country had made him a likely candidate for the presidency at more than one election, and who was respected by all, and a young man, who was honest and perfectly incompetent ruler; fortunately both for himself and his country his ambition was not rewarded by success; Dona Apolinaria, his wife, a native of Buenos Ayres, was related to some of the families of the Argentine Republic; and Elena, their only daughter, a pretty girl of nineteen, with rather a sullen expression of face and such supercilious manners as befitted so great an heiress. Geronimo Usabarrera was a good-natured, good-looking man, who was loved and respected by all, but only his wife. Political troubles had exiled the family from Monte Video for more than two years, and obliged them to live altogether on their country estate. Had the truth been told, Usabarrera was not sorry to escape from the constant worry and anxiety of the intrigues with which his wife's ambition surrounded him; as it was, he did his utmost to reconcile her to her temporary seclusion, even to the extent of building a chapel for her (for Dona Apolinaria was a devout woman) and a constant in her religious duties, and allowing her to send to her old home in Buenos Ayres for a priest. Thus it had been that Felipe had entered on his first duties in his profession.

He had come there straight from the religious seminary in which he had been educated, and which he had entered at the age of ten. Of his childhood he had but the vaguest recollection. Always, so far as he could remember, he had lived with the same old woman; always in the same dark little house, that he no entered but themselves. He supposed the old woman to have been his grandmother—why he supposed her so, he did not remember, nor did he remember anything very clearly about her except that she beat him occasionally with a leather strap.
The strap and old woman had become inseparable in his memory: he thought of one without he thought of the other, and the general impression left on his mind by his infancy was that he had been brought up by the leather strap and the old woman. He did not know the names of his parents; his father he never had heard of; his mother he had seen but once. A very handsome woman, of uncertain age, and rather stout; her voice was rather harsh and disagreeable, and her dress astonished every one. His childish eyes—but not all the powder and paint with which it was daubed could hide the extraordinary beauty of her face. The old woman had fallen ill of this unknown lady came to visit her. As she came out of the door he saw the old woman smell by the hand and led him to the window.

"That art Felipe?"
"Yes, lady," he said with timid hesitation.

"That art a good boy?"
"Yes, and I am very satisfied." Now he knew that this craving must have been the longing to be with Teresa and in her thoughts, for it was her absence or her coldness that brought it on him; it was the craving for her kindness and good-will, and for the love of the man who had been his father, and the love of the world he had suddenly opened before him, disclosing a new pleasure of which he had hitherto never dreamt; it was hardly wonderful that at first he was bewildered by the novelty of the sensation, and almost drunk with its intensity.

Teresa's affection was compensation for all past unhappiness. The affection that he felt for her was an end and interest in his life more real and living than any he had imagined before, by the side of which the fervor of religion was a cold and empty abstraction; it was a joy and pleasure that went on increasing and growing in strength every day. And it was only affection! Felipe was a priest, and priests have nothing to do with love.

Nevertheless it is doubtful whether Felipe's life was actually made happier and more contented. Apart from the restless hunger with which his soul seemed to be now possessed, Teresa's kindness and consideration, served to throw into darker relief the solitude of his existence, and the little consolation which he had found in the world he was held by the rest of the world. The sight of Teresa, that before he had hardly felt at all, now inflicted the keenest suffering upon him, every one of them seemed to widen the gulf of contempt that the
