On Saturday afternoon while a prominent banker of this place was fishing at Bulmer's Pond preserve, a large fish rose to the fly, and before he could be killed carried off the entire cast containing several fies. The fisherman rerigged his tackle and about an hour afterward, quite a distance from where the fish was struck, the cast of flies was seen floating on the surface: the big fish on one hook and a smaller one which had taken one of the other files, swimming with another. Both were secured.
