

When the report was about to commence, the major domo, or steward, suddenly raising his hand, said aloud: "Forewarned!—Place for the Lady Rowena." A side-door at the upper end of the hall now opened behind the banquet table, and Rowena, followed by four female attendants entered the apartment. Coiffure, though surprised, and perhaps not altogether agreeably so, at his ward appearing in public on this occasion, hastened to meet her, and to conduct her, with respectful ceremony, to the elevated seat on his own right hand, appropriated to the lady of the mansion. All stood up to receive her; and replying to her courtesy by a mute gesture of salutation, she moved gracefully forward to assume her place at the board. Ere she had time to do so, the Templar whispered to the Prior, "I shall wear no collar of gold of yours at the tournament. The Chian wine is your own."

"Said I not so?" answered the Prior; "but check your rapines, the Franklin observes you."

Unheeding this remonstrance, and accustomed only to act upon the immediate impulse of his own wishes, Brian de Bois-Guilbert kept his eyes riveted on the Saxon beauty, more striking perhaps to his own imagination, because differing widely from those of the Eastern sultans.

The Star.
J. E. COLLINGS, Editor.
FREDERICTON, NOVEMBER 11, 1879.
A SPECIMEN OF A NEWFOUNDLAND EDITOR.

There is an Island beyond the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It is Newfoundland. Away to the North of this Island is a ragged village made up of about sixty houses, each one storey. The village is called Carbonear. The village is built on the sea coast, and its trade is cod fish and cod oil, caplin and herring—and that is all. The people catch fish, and get in return flour, pork, molasses and tweed. The scenery is made up of stunted fir bushes, which the natives call "var"; great high cliffs where one might see

"The mountain goat bleating aloft," and a few tufts of spray-burnt heath. Just a year ago Mr. Rochfort, who was always said by the people he travelled among to be a little "siffy," started a newspaper in this village. The people thought of course it was one of his crazy fits, and that he would go off again lecturing to the natives further north on the "Federation of the Empire," the "Complexion of Aristotle," or the "Difference between Sheep and Goats." These had proved eloquent themes for Monsieur Rochfort during the time he edited two newspapers which lived each two years or so. But strange as it may seem, the "lucid interval" extended much longer than people first thought, and the Herald—for that is the name of this paper—is alive yet.

Some time ago some of the papers of St. John's, out of sport, copied something from the Herald; giving the precise motion of certain sea gulls that used to visit the waters of Carbonear. They did not credit the Herald with the items, and the result was that they brought down poor Rochfort's spleen on them, in sentences containing not less than one hundred words each. We noted the "tempest in the tea pot" next mail, and made a few comments. Out of curiosity we had been exchanging with Rochfort, and got his paper yesterday. It is about the size of a small pane of glass. We quote from it:

The other end of the sentence is about ten times as long as the foregoing, and just twenty times as impertinent. We quote again: "With regard to his audacious, impertinent, ignorant, and malicious criticism of the Newfoundland press, we shall merely remind this worthy of a certain familiar proverb having reference to the injurious effects likely to be produced upon its nest, by—"

And the "greatest" of this too "is behind." The whole article is in two sentences, is nearly a column in length, and is quite bitter for John Rochfort.

And now we shall a "tale unfold whose slightest word" will so harrow the soul of Mr. Rochfort that he will regret when he impaled himself upon such a dangerous shoal as the Fredericton STAR. We have a good memory, and it serves us very well to-day to tell our story. It is now about six or seven years since Mr. Rochfort, quite religious and quite green, began to edit a paper in St. John's. The name of that paper we don't remember just now, but it was published on Duckworth street, up a creaky old stairs. John became very poetical in the first of his editorial career, and it is said piled his trade so far as to parody new hymns with pleasing airs. Christmas came round, and John had the usual "Carols" written in the usual long sentences; but one carol among the rest was addressed to the Editor. He had found it on his desk. The opening lines ran thus:

"Round thy noble brow
Oft methinks I see a halo" of intellect round the author's head. The poem stretched out to fifteen lines, and John declared it to be "a sonnet of exquisite sweetness, doing altogether too much honor to the Editor"—himself. He scanned the lines and told his readers that the words "a halo" were an amphibious, and hence pleased the ear. The next day a friend wrote to him—through one of the papers—and asked him if he knew what an acrostic meant; and then advised him to look at the initial letter of each line, beginning with the top one. John did so, and he found it read, "Rochfort is an Ass."

This is the same man that has the generosity to write the paragraphs we quote above. We know John will pardon us for taking up so much time with him, and we know our readers will, too: Walter Scott gives as much space to one of the "fools," or jesters in his novels, as he does to the Knights who carry war into Palestine. Some men become notorious through their errors, and some through their fooliness. And we have a case of both before us, in John A. Rochfort.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.
Some time ago the St. John Freeman wrote a lengthy article which it called "Civil and religious equality." Sir Charles Tupper had made a speech a few days before at the Quebec dinner, where he claimed to be actuated by a desire to pursue a policy that dealt out justice to every religious denomination. Mr. Anglin retorted quite bitterly, and reminded the Knight of his opposition to the Catholics in trying to have the management of their own schools. That both Mr. Tilley and Dr. Tupper were resolved to shatter the "Confederation" rather than allow the Catholics to have fair play; and adds:

"Nay more. We believe it is true that after Confederation, when Dr. Tupper introduced the Free School Act in the Nova Scotia Legislature, the Archbishop again asked that the rights of Catholics to have such schools as they preferred, be secured, and that Dr. Tupper again refused."
The Halifax Chronicle, a loud-hoaling Grit, and a bitter enemy of Sir Charles, quotes the Freeman's article, but adds at the end that Mr. Anglin is astray; that Sir Charles did not sit in the Nova Scotia Legislature after Confederation; which statement would throw discredit on the whole of Mr. Anglin's assertions, and prove the article quite a silly one coming from such a source as the ex-Speaker of the House of Commons. But it may be that the Freeman knows its statements to be incorrect, and does not care provided it succeeds in imbittering its readers against the present government.
And to the charge itself: We cannot believe that a man like Sir Charles Tupper would be guilty of knowingly oppressing any sect of people. He may have done so in effect, while believing he was giving them a law in which they might rejoice in after years. A man who by his own energies and ability raises himself head and shoulders above his fellows, is not usually a small minded man. We are not old enough to have witnessed Sir Charles' career, but we have been reading it lately in the history of Canada. It is the career of a man who has to thank nobody but himself for what he is; and a man whose course has ever been upward and onward. Such a man could not be guilty of what Mr. Anglin attributes to Sir Charles Tupper.

Rowdyism is becoming rampant again in Fredericton. Scarce a day goes by that a policeman has't a tussle with some drunken rough on the streets. But the worst feature of the case is that the rowdy who is seen to-day kicking and cuffing the police on the streets, is at large to-morrow, acting the same part over again. Is there not, we ask, some law to inflict a punishment on these desperadoes that will keep them from being a terror and a disgrace to the city? Let us ask that the Judges do their duty; else there is no use in the police doing theirs.
Don't fail to see Grace Egerton in the famous "Odds and ends," in City Hall to-night.

TURKEY.
TURKEY'S dis irae seems to be fast approaching. The Sultan promised reform, but his corrupt Empire is going from bad to worse. England's attitude towards the Mussulman has now reached that point where patience ceases to be a virtue. But the castigation has been put off again, and Salisbury promises the Sultan "one chance more." When this chance has gone, it is hard to tell what the next will be. It looks, indeed, as if the day is coming, when this abandoned Empire is to be blotted forever off the map of Europe. Who knows but ere long the British flag will float from the battlements of Constantinople, and the Golden Horn see above it the Union Jack instead of the Crescent!

Turkey seems to be the very cream of Europe. Fifteen centuries ago the first Christian Emperor sailed along the Mediterranean looking for a place where he might build a city that would rival Imperial Rome. On the Golden Horn stood the ancient city of Stamboul, and Constantine declared it to be the garden of the world. He increased it in magnificence, called it Constantinople and transferred his senate thither. Centuries after it fell into the hands of the "unbelieving Turk," and is yet degraded by Moslem rites. It is the most precious jewel in Europe, and has been the coveted of the "great powers" for this many a year. Russia sees it in her dreams, and her wily statesmen never give up the hope of it. Who knows but Bismarck indulges in the fond dream, that it will once be German's; England, proverbial for her keen relish for good things would glory in adding it to her possessions.

By common consent the meanest power in Europe holds Turkey; because it could not be divided to the satisfaction of the powers. England has taken the sick man under her wing with that far sighted policy that makes many a charitable person (? take the old man in, and minister to his wants; that when he dies the little effects may be secure—to the benefactor. England has doctored Turkey when beset by tyranny and undermined by immorality. The time is coming when Turkey must die. Will it be that England will take possession of this household gods? She has the best right.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S SPEECH.
The Lord Mayor's banquet has been held. Among other things Earl Beaconsfield said—

Doubtless there were portions of Ireland where there would be considerable suffering if a remedy was not offered. The Irish people should remember that they never appealed to England simply in vain. It would be the duty of Her Majesty's Ministers to watch the condition of Ireland with the anxiety required by the situation. The Irish people should condescend to remember that their harvest, though good, and though they were much more dependent upon it than are the English people on theirs, still was much better than the harvest of England.
Addressing the Lord Mayor, Lord Beaconsfield said—"When I addressed your predecessor I informed him that the Government was contemplating large military operations in Central Asia, the object being to strengthen and render secure the north-western boundary of the Indian Empire. These operations have been signally successful, and British influence is fully established in Central Asia. (Loud cheers.)"

There is no forecasting of the future policy of the Government as was expected.

PAHNELL says: "We aim at establishing actual tillers of Irish soil, on land, as its owners, not as tenants."
The great agitator leaves for America about the 15th of November.
