Sweet Eva!

CHAPTER XXII.

"Wants to be at home, does he?" he said ironically. "I shouldn't have thought it was just the other way on, if you ask me. I never see you two together—never see him at all, if it comes to that. What's he do with himself all the time? Where does he get to?"

Eva's colour rose.

"He has a great deal to see to—his father's affairs, you know," she defended Philip.

Mr. Dennison frowned. He looked at his daughter uneasily.

"Don't you give him too free a hand, my girl," he said. "Begin as you mean to go on, that's my idea. Why don't you go with him if he has to go here, there and everywhere? You've lost half your spirits since you were married."

Eva laughed.

"Oh, father, what nonsense!"

"It's a fact, all the same," he insisted. "I shall speak to Philip about it when I see him."

"Father you wouldn't dare. I won't allow it." Eva was frightened. "I'm all right. There's nothing the matter. It's been rather depressing at the Highway House since we came back, that's all. Now Mrs. Winterdick is away things will be better."

Mr. Dennison said "Humph" rather sceptically.

His conscience was uneasy where Eva was concerned.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Eva was having breakfast the following morning when the door opened and Philip walked into the room.

He said "Good morning" rather hurriedly, and sat down at the head of the table.

"I saw your father last night," he said.

"Father!" there was a note of dismay in Eva's voice.

Indoor Life

Spending more time indoors makes women far more subject to constipation than men.

The liver becomes sluggish and torpid, the bowels contipated and the system poisoned by impurities.

If you would get away from the myriads of ills which result from constipation, it is only necessary to use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

The benefits from their use are as lasting as they are prompt and certain.

Mrs. John Barry, 18 St. Amable Street, Quebec, Que., writes:

"This is to certify that I was troubled for years with constipation and tried all kinds of medicines without relief. At last my husband suggested that I try Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I did so, and must say that they have given me more relief than all the medicines I have taken during the last fifteen years. I may also add that I have used Dr. Chase's Ointment for piles with excellent results."

still call it your 'home' then," he said, irritably. "One would have thought that here—in my house"—

"No laughing again," he said. "I still sometimes forget that it is yours, by right of purchase."

Eva did not answer; these moods of his tried her terribly. Sometimes for days he seemed quite himself, and never made any reference to the cloud between them.

Things were easier for her then; it was only when he showed this restless unhappiness and bitterness that she felt it increasingly difficult to keep up the game of pretence.

"We shall be near Calligan, that's one thing," Philip said suddenly.

He was looking at Eva now, and she flushed at this unexpected reference to his friend, but she answered quietly enough.

"Yes, that will be nice," Philip laughed.

CHAPTER XXIII.

With plenty of money at one's disposal, few things are difficult, and the Winterdick's found a flat to their choice easily enough.

"Spent what you like—make it look top-hole, and I'll be pleased," Mr. Dennison told them. "I give you carte blanche." He had intended to say "carte blanche," but was uncertain how to pronounce the second word, so wisely refrained from trying. "I give you a free hand," he substituted. "Money's no object—I promised I'd do the thing in style, and there you are."

He looked at Philip for approval, but Philip had turned away.

With every day he felt his position more acutely. Generous and good-natured as his father-in-law had proved, Philip disliked him more as time went on. It was gall and wormwood to him to think of the agreement between them. At first it had not seemed to matter; he had accepted it more or less philosophically, but since he had grown to love his wife it had seemed an intolerable shame.

He took little or no interest in the purchase of the furniture and the scheme of decoration. Once or twice he went with Eva to the shops, but he was so obviously disinterested that she gave up asking him to accompany her.

Her first delight in it had all died. This was not a "home" which they were preparing, but just a place with four walls and a door.

Once when she appealed to Philip as to what were his favourite colours, he shrugged his shoulders:—

"I don't care—anything—please yourself."

He did not mean to be cruel. He believed that Eva was absolutely indifferent to him, and that she despised him with all her heart.

Sometimes he found himself looking at her and marvelling that she had so greatly changed. It seemed impossible that he had once been remorseful because he thought she cared for him.

One night at dinner, when Eva had just returned from a shopping expedition to London, he said irreverently:—

"Do you remember that dinner party the mater gave before we were married?"

She raised startled eyes. "Yes—when Kitty Arlington failed."

Philip frowned. "I wasn't thinking of that. I was thinking of the drive home afterwards." He leaned a little forward, his face flushing. "It didn't seem much like pretence then did it?" he asked.

She met his eyes steadily. "I think we were both rather clever," she said lightly.

Philip looked at his wife with challenging eyes.

"I wonder what we would both give to be able to go back to that night!" he said.

"I wonder!" Eva was peeling a peach. She kept her eyes steadily on her task. She wondered what he would say if he knew what a contrast the unhappy, shrinking soul of her was to the girl he could see in her dainty evening frock who looked so calm and spoke so indifferently. What he would say were she to give way to the almost overpowering longing in her heart to rush round to him and sob out all her loneliness and misery.

Household Notes.

When combining ham with potatoes and vegetable to make hash, a little lemon juice added will improve the flavor.

Apples, pears and quinces are delicious when they are allowed to simmer slowly in a closely covered earthen jar.

An excellent menu for the individual tray luncheon is shrimp salad served in salad rolls, lemon ice, sponge cakes and coffee.

To make cinnamon toast, butter the well-browned toast, and spread with scraped maple sugar mixed cinnamon to taste.

"The greasy look" will disappear from your skin if you wash the face with fresh water into which a lemon are being squeezed.

A delicious salad dressing is made by flavoring whipped cream with a little lemon juice and tarragon vinegar and adding chopped olives, green peppers and pimientos.

Beans boiled with ham are usually hard; to cook them carefully boil beans half done in clear water, drain and finish cooking in ham stock.

Batter cakes baked on a soapstone griddle are more attractive in appearance but a bit tougher than those cooked on a greased pan.

If you do not salt eggs while they are frying, the yolks will stand round and firm and the whites will be soft and tender. Season after the can a quarter of an inch of egg, chopped fine, minced onion, pepper and pimento, paprika and to taste. Delicious!

When opening canned sardines, try to open the lid in the side, the can a quarter of an inch from the top and let the brine drain away. This method the heads are preserved intact.
