Correct Stationery For Mourning

The excessively heavy border on mour-The excessively heavy border on mouring paper has gone out of fashion, and is even now considered bad form, ostentatious and vulgar. The widow uses dead white note paper with a black border not more than three-eighths of an inch wide.
The correct width for one mourning a parent daughter sister or brother is one-The correct width for one mourning apparent, daughter, sister or brother is one-quarter of an inch; and toward the end of the second year of mourning a very narrow black edge—not more than an eighth of an inch wide is used.

Correspondence cards have a black border corresponding to that on the note paper, and the monogram or crest may be printed in black in the upper left hand corner, the upper right hand corner being reserved for the house address, either engraved or wirten by hand.

The date is usually added to the polite note at the end, and is placed toward the left edge of the sheet. Condolence Letters. Cards and letters of condolence must all be answered—this is imperative, and this may be done by writing a brief word of thanks on the correspondence card or by sending an even briefer message of appreciation on the black-edged visiting card, inchosed in an addressed and stamped ed envelope.

card, inclosed in an addressed and stamped envelope.

Women of the best taste do not fancy the ready engraved cards of condolence and of reply to condolence, for the personally expressed word is always best on such occasions.

The woman in deep mourning does not make cails or entertain formally, but as invitations to social functions will be sent to her during the mourning period she will need many visiting cards to return with acknowledgment and regrets.

When it is her purpose again to enter society she leaves off her mourning and sends out cards for informal days at home or a more or less formal reception.
