She (slowly-I'll marry you. -There is such a thing as prevented sympathy with the brute creation. A dear little blue-eyed fairy of a child was told the story of Prometheus: how he was chained to the cold rocks and how a vulture came daily and tore out the Titan's liver. The pathos of the myth appealed to her strongly. She overflowed with sympathy-for the bird of prey. "Poor old vulture!" she exclaimed, just think of his having liver every day for dinner!" It must have been the same you have no need to take thought of the child who, on seeing the picture of the little things that help to make a woman Christain thrown to the lions, was afraid charming.
