In consequence of the emeule ington, under General Ross, and for his distinguished conduct on that occasion he was honoured by being made the bearer of the dispatches to England. His next battle field was, in the capacity of military secretary, in the attack on New Orleans, where the good, the gallant Pakenham died in his arms; and he returned to England in time to partake in the glories of his last European battle, as Assistant Quartermaster General of the 6th Division under Sir John Lambert, on the field of Wattlefoo.

Sir Henry Smith's career as a staff-officer commenced in 1811 with his appointment as Brigade Major in the celebrated Light Division, in which he was ever conspicuous for his dashing gallantry in the field, his frank warm-hearted bearing to his brother officers, and his unwearied attention to the comforts and the wants of the soldier.

To return to the Peninsula, that first of schools for practical military study, possessing this advantage, that an officer of or-dinary capacity, by simply obeying orders and steadily performing his duty, could not fail to arrive at some degree of en.inence in the profession; while others more highly gifted had only to make use of their observing and reflective powers to become masters in the art; and no one who knew Harry Smith (his familiar name) in those days, could doubt for a moment that whenever he acquired the rank, and the opportunity offered, he would show himself a general worthy of his illustrious

I have already stated that in 1827 he was appointed Deputy Adjutant General in the West Indies. In the year following he was transferred in the same rank to the Cape of Good Hope, and in 1839 appointed Deputy Adjutant General in India, where he has remained ever since, and was engaged in that rank in 1844 in the battles of Gwalior and Maharajpore. In 1896 he accompanied the 2d battalion of the 78th to Sicily, and was wounded at the battle of Maida. He also assisted at the capture of the fortress of Catrone in Calabria. In 1807 he accompanied the expedition to Egypt; was present at the battle of Alexandria; and was severely wounded at Rosetta. In June, 1809, he accompanied the 2d battalion of the 42d to the Peninsula, and commanded a light battallion at the battle of Busaco; during the retreat to the lines of Torres Vedras; was at the action of Foz d'Arouce, where he was wounded; and at the battle of Fuentes d'Oner. He also commanded the same battalion at Ciudad Rodrigo; and the first battalion of the 42nd at the storming of Fort St. Michael, and during the the seige of Burgos, as well as in the setreat to Portugal. That such a man, of attainments so various, and with talents so commanding, should have found it difficult to get into the House of Commons, and be forced at last to sit there as Member for Wigan, should the above arrangement be carried into effect, is one of the strongest proofs that could be adduced of the unpopularity of the Government with which he has associated himself.—John Bull.

THE COLONIAL OFFICE. - We are glad to receive from various quarters, evidence of the improving spirit manifested in the Colonial Office since Mr. Secretary Gladstone's appointment to that department. The Right Honourable Sec and Lord Lyttleton are industriously endeavouring to make themselves complete masters of the business of their office; and not a deputation or an individual that has the honour of an audience with either, but leaves convinced that the colonies have at length obtained Ministers who will not err from dependence for information on subordinates. Both are remarkable though, properly, too cautious to give prematurely expression to opinions, both impress on all who transact business with them, the persuasion that the subject matter of discussion will be thoroughly considered and honestly decided on.—John Bull.

REPRESENTATION OF SOUTH LANCASHIRE. - We think it right to state, for the information of our readers, that there is considerable probability of an early election for the southern division of this county. Within the last few days, rumours which had previously been in circulation of an intention on the part of government to create several additional peers have acpart of government to create several admining peers have acquired greater probability and consistency. It is now pretty generally believed that, after the bill for altering the corn-law has passed the House of Commons, several individuals now or recently in that house, including Lord Francis Egerton, Lord Lincoln, and Lord Ashley, will be called to the upper house, in order to assist in carrying the great measure through that assembly. We give the statement as it reaches us, not vouching for its truth, but at the same time with a strong impression that there is at least some foundation for it.—Manchester Guardian.

It is a curious symptom of the present state of the share market, that whenever a railway bill has a chance of passing through parliament, the scrip immediately falls to nothing the market, and whenever there is a chance of its rejection, the scrip rises to a certain extent, in consequence of there being a prospect of a division of the funds which remain in the hands of the company.

The Steamship Cambria, Captain Judkins, left Liverpool on the 18th ult. at 4 p. M., arrived at Halifax on the 1st inst., at noon, and left again at 4 p. m. She brought from 90 to 100 passengers to Halifax, and landed about 20 there.

On Saturday, about 20 minutes to 12 o'clock, the weather being foggy, and the boat running at half speed, just as preparations were made to stop her, for the purpose of sounding, she ran on shore at Cape Cod. The engines were immediately reversed, but she remained hard and fast. An anchor and stern cable were carried out. After heaving on it, the anchor came home without having altered the ship's position. At the time she went ashore it was about half tide. As the tide rose, the stern swing round. CLERGY RESERVES .- It was not unreasonably hoped, when the disposal of the Clergy Reserve question was referred to the Imperial Parliament to determine, that this "old sore" was to be effectually healed by the result. But unhappily for the Hon. Mr. BRUNEAU moved the second reading.

Hon. Mr. Nellson considered that this was a bill that no gislative body of any Christian country ought to sanction.

Hon. Mr. BRUNEAU made some remarks in French in reply

The decision arrived at by the Imperial Legislature, though it Hon. Mr. Caron, Speaker—The English law in this case is defective, as he had been informed by the Law Officers. It had been said that the power given by this law would be abused, but he did not think that such was the case, from the manner in which the power given by the bill is defined. The warrant was not to issue for the arrest of the person till he had refused to give his attendance as a witness. He believed that on the whole it was a very useful bill.

What was, beyond all doubt, originally intended for her benefit, has not satisfied the obstructive and querulous party we have alluded to. For we find them, in the House and out of the Church having the management of what is certainly now its admitted rights in these Reserves, as they were before the Imperial Legislature decided the original difficulty. It is a well known fact that these Reserves, under existing arrangements, are of little value to the Church, in comparison to what they would be under a prudent and economical system of managewhole it was a very useful bill.

Hon. Mr. Knowlton said that the magistrate performed his duties gratuitously, and he conceived that there ought to be some mode of compelling witnesses to attend to give evidence, for often the course of justice was thwarted by persons who have been summoned as witnesses refusing to give their attendance.

Hon. Mr. Crooks—In Upper Canada, where the same English Criminal Law exists as does in Lower Canada, no such want has been discovered. The law was, he considered, well crough guarded.

The bill was they used a seal of the property. The Church, in comparison to what they would be under a prudent and economical system of management, controlled by the body who are especially interested in the property. The Church is naturally anxious to have the superintendence of its patrimony within its control.
