Gleanings.

"The kind of coast defences which Canada most needs to erect," says the Buffalo Courier, "is a fence with high, sharp pickets, over which United States defaulters cannot climb."

The London Standard, commenting on the recent annual encampment of the 7th New York regiment, says:—Our volunteers flatter themselves that their camps are models of military neatness. They would be astonished, however, were they subjected to the discipline which the 7th Volunteer regiment of New York are undergoing in the state camp at Peekskill. So rigid is Col. Phister that not only are rugs, easy chairs, mirrors and knicknacks which embellish the tents of our volunteers at Wimbledon strictly prohibited, but it is rigidly forbidden on pain of military punishment to throw down a half burnt match or the stump of a cigar. It may be doubted whether rules so rigid were ever laid down in the camp of our regular soldiers at Aldershot, which, it must be admitted, is an untidy, disorderly encampment in comparison to Peekskill. The general idea is that discipline in the American army is far less strict than in Europe, but it is evident there are exceptions, and the New York regiment can fairly claim that their camp is in tidiness absolutely unrivalled by those of men in the service of the effete monarchies of Europe.
