

and their application in co-operative education. Concluding the course will be a study of lesson planning based on adult learning. By this time, it is believed, the students will have had some experience in programme planning and lesson preparation that they can apply in their own countries.

Among those welcoming the students to Canada were officials of the Co-operative Union of Canada, the Canada Foundation, the Canadian National Commission for UNESCO, the Overseas Institute of Canada, the External Aid Office and other government and private agencies. Highlights of their stay in the capital included a social evening at the International House, tours of the National Museum and National Gallery and a visit to the House of Commons, where they were received by the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Harry Hays.

Countries sending candidates for the course were Basutoland, Cambodia, Kenya, Mauritius, Nigeria, Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia, Tanganyika, Uganda, Antigua, Barbados, British Guiana, British Honduras, Dominica, Grenada, Jamaica, Montserrat, Trinidad, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Malaysia, Pakistan and Thailand.

SOUVENIR STAMP-CARD

The 1964 souvenir card of postage stamps will soon be offered for sale at Canadian post offices for 50 cents, the face value of the stamps attached to it.

Four regular issues and five commemoratives have been chosen for the 1964 edition of this best-selling card. The three-cent and five-cent Queen Elizabeth stamps, the ten-cent issue showing an Eskimo in a kayak and the new seven-cent stamp featuring a modern inter-city jet aircraft represent the regular issues. The five commemorative stamps on the card were issued to honour Sir Casimir Gzowski, the centennial of Victoria, British Columbia, Sir Martin Frobisher, the two hundredth anniversary of the establishment of regular land-mail service in Canada, and Canada's interest in world peace.

The souvenir card, which comes complete with its own mailing envelope, was first introduced in 1959. Intended as an item for visitors to Canada, it has gained popularity with both tourists and philatelists. Those cards issued in earlier years, which are long out of stock, now sell at many times their face value to collectors. More than 450,000 cards have been sold in the past five years, with a new edition appearing each year. The 1964 card is Series 6.

BLACK WATCH WINS ARMS TEST

The 2nd Battalion, The Black Watch (Royal Highland Regiment) of Canada, recently won the skill-at-arms competition among the units forming Canada's NATO brigade stationed at Sennelager, Germany. The Highlanders, winning the contest for the second year running, had a score of 298 out of 500 to beat the 1st Battalion, Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry, with 294.5, and the 1st Battalion, The Royal Canadian Regiment, with 264.8.

The competition is a comprehensive test of efficiency in all phases of training, including mine-clearing, endurance, battle procedures, casualty treatment, road movement and field cooking. The rigorous assessment system permits umpires to descend without warning on the competing units at any hour of the day or night to carry out tests.
