

The Canadian food production programme has been geared to the needs of the war situation for two years now. From the outset of the war we have been producing more food than the entire food requirements of the United Kingdom. This has been done in a common pool of resources, and the exchange of materials has been going on for two years. The production of food in Canada has been increasing steadily, and we have been able to supply the United Kingdom with essential foodstuffs. The Canadian-United Kingdom food programme has been a success, and it is a model for other countries to follow. The programme has been expanded to include other countries, and it is now a world-wide programme. The programme has been successful because of the cooperation of the United Kingdom and Canada, and it is a testament to the power of international cooperation. The programme has been successful because of the cooperation of the United Kingdom and Canada, and it is a testament to the power of international cooperation. The programme has been successful because of the cooperation of the United Kingdom and Canada, and it is a testament to the power of international cooperation.