to form the Siege, and which might in the whole amount to about 8 or 9000 effective Men.

The whole of our Army was aſſembled at Beauport, the laſt June Day of June, conſiſting of five Battalions of regular Troops, from 30. 7 to 800 a Battalion, the Troops of the Colony, and near an equal Number of Savages; the reſt were only Militia, and made up in the whole about 14000 Men.

The Right of the Camp was fixed near the Decoy, and the Left extended to the Falls of Montmorency. The Church of Beauport was in the Center; on the Left were encamped the Battalion of Royal Rouſillon, the Volunteers of Dubrel, the Militia of Montreal, and all the Savages, under the Command of the Chevalier de Levy.

Monſieur Dumas commanded the Right Wing of the Army, which was compoſed of the Militia of Quebec, and of the [1] Trois Rivieres (or three Rivers) whilſt the Troops of the Colony were divided between the Left and Right. Monſieur de Senezergue, Brigadier General, commanded the Center of the Camp, and had under his Orders the Battalions of La Sarre, Languedoc, Guyenne, and Bearn. The Head Quarters were fixed at the Houſe of Monſieur de Vienne, called La Miſtanguienne. The Garriſon of the Town was compoſed of the Burghers and the Seamen, in all about 2000. The Troops and the Burghers rolled together, and did Duty with one another, and the Seamen and their Officers were employed at the Batteries under the Command of the Officers of the Artillery. The Troops in the Garriſon were relieved every four Days from the Camp. A Company of Pioneers was likewiſe formed to carry on the neceſſary Works during the Siege, under the Direction of the Surveyor or Builder of the King's Ships.

Monſieur de Rameſay, Lieutenant de Roy, commanded in the C   Town,

----

[1] The Trois Rivieres is a Government on the North Shore, near half-way between Quebec and Montreal; the Capital of this Government bears the ſame Name, but is only an open ſtraggling Village.