ufe for all the money they could raise there.

ho

the

as

nce

ion

be

fce

ch

ch

ay

he

re

70

to

d

Many pages are employed to justify the intended radical destruction of the most fruitful provinces by one commander, p. 25. (See Bellifle's letters, p. 70.) and to extenuate and excuse the excesses and extortions practised in that electorate by another. Great pains are also taken to quiet compassionate minds, and reconcile the alarmed Hanoverian to a return of the same guests, by instances of their inoffensive march thro' Germany during the course of the last war, P. 30. And by their humanity during this, in permitting, while they were masters of Hanover, the sun to sine and the rivers to flow, for the use of its inhabitants. P. 27. Happy for many of them they did, who despoiled of their ALL had perhaps no drink but the running stream, and no roof but the canopy of heaven.

Until the author can reconcile the features of two pictures drawn to represent the same object, but opposite and unlike as christian charity is, p. 26, to unprovoked and savage barbarism; as the tenderness of a rightful and natural sovereign, p. 24, 33, collecting light taxes for government and defence, to the depredations of an invader, who renders himself universally odious by E 2 doing