TUESDAY MORNING, FEB. 22.

Ontario's Hospital.

Col. Pyne, better known as Dr. Pyne, or Hon. R. A. Pyne, minister of education for Ontario, has been out of education for a long time. He has been organizing the Province of Ontario's hospital at Orpington in England, for wounded soldiers. The hospital is not merely for Canadians, but for any kind of wounded that come along, black or white. The opening ceremonies at the hospital were dominated by the presence of the colonial secretary, Right Hon. Bonar Law.

The site of the hospital was selected for its sanitary value, and the whole institution has been constructed with a view to utility rather than appearance. The equipment is said to have astonished visitors by its completeness, and this is good to hear, for the Canadian hospitals at the front have had the same reputation and Ontario must sustain it.

Col. Ross as O.C., Lieut.-Col. Cameron as chief surgeon, and Lieut.-Col. Chambers, as chief of medical staff, are to be congratulated upon the successful start of their splendid and important unit; and the Ontario Government must feel the satisfaction which comes to all to whom virtue is its own reward.

A Soldier's Insurance.

Private Henry Lancaster was a civic employee. He enlisted for active service, and the City of Toronto insured his life, on the understanding that if anything happened to him the policy when collected would be paid over to his wife. He understood that she understood it. The city understood it. The company understood it.

For some reason the city had the policies made out to itself. Private Lancaster has given his life for his country. His policy has fallen due. The company acknowledged its responsibility. The city collected the money. The widow applied for payment. The city, like a Philadelphia lawyer, pleads that it would not be legal to pay the money to her, for her husband did not live in Toronto, but on St. Clair avenue.

This is mighty small potatoes. We do not accuse the civic officials of any hand in the matter, for they must do their duty. But some controller or alderman has been responsible for the careful economy displayed in taking care that the city will be able to chisel any unfortunate widow whose husband may not have complied with the letter of the law, out of the substance on which she depended.

It may not be legal to pay this money over to the widow, but if it isn't, it cannot be legal, surely, for the city to collect such money under false pretences? The company did not dispute the claim. They paid the money when they heard of the hero's death. Is there any man on the board of control or in the city council mean enough to want the city to keep this money?

If it is illegal for the city to pay the money, we have a legislature which ought to have some common sense in it, and an attorney-general who should be able to advise the city how to go about doing its duty in the matter.

Who is of the Inferior Breed?

A well set-up young recruiting officer on a Sherbourne street corner yesterday announced himself as out for the 180th. He was "conversing" all and sundry who looked likely, and he was, it is to be hoped, getting a fair return. He was able to tell his front, and he was the sixth to go. It is difficult to understand how any man fit to go can hang back after an example like this.

The men who are left behind now, and who are able to go, who are not medically unfit, nor burdened with such responsibilities as relieve any man from duty except at home, ought to realize that if they do not respond now, it is because they are of an inferior breed. There is no use making any bones about it. It is not calling names or abusing a man, to tell him how he can judge himself. No one else needs to do it. He has only to retire to his chamber to meditate upon it, or lie awake at night and ponder it.

man has today is to get into khaki. It is not a question of danger. It is merely a question of manhood. Danger is just as near in Toronto as at the front. Fifteen or twenty people die every day in Toronto. It is much better to die at the front than to die in Toronto, unless plain duty, about which there is no dispute, keeps one at home.

The opportunities of enlisting are so various, and the varieties of service are so great that no one can plead the unsuitability of the regiment or the battery or the transport or ambulance or any other corps as a reason for staying out of khaki. Every man from 18 to 45 is eligible, if he is in good health and is physically fit. The only way to know that you are free from this responsibility is to go down to the recruiting headquarters and ask the authorities what they want you to do?

The Cost of War.

Whatever may be thought about the war or the conduct of the war in England the cheerful way in which the government goes after the necessary funds ought to encourage all who have a similar responsibility on this side of the water. There was a time in the reputed history of Israel when gold and silver were not accounted of, but we feel assured that there never have been such financial burdens assumed with such good cheer and stout heart as the burdens of the great European war in England.

The sums of money that have been and are being voted, and that will be voted in the future stagger the imagination of all ordinary men. Only minds which are accustomed to deal with statistics as coal-heavers deal with coal have any grasp of facts or the values involved. None of the ordinary commonplace considerations with which people console themselves under circumstances regarded as unusual at other times, are of any weight in the present circumstances, to which the distinction of being unusual is altogether too faint and weak. This point of view must be kept in mind when the criticisms of the abnormally far-sighted and fore-sighted are brought out to stimulate the processes of those in charge of affairs.

The wisest men are perhaps not always listened to. There were plenty of people who told us all about the war, when it would start, how it would be conducted, how long it would last, what the course of it would be, its result, and the means by which it would be carried on. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle wrote a review of Bernhardi's book, for example, which, had it been acted upon, would have enabled us to meet the war properly if not entirely to avert it. There are other wise heads giving out their wisdom at present, and if their advice be followed we shall find ourselves all right when the war is over. We may be quite sure that it won't be followed, and that we shall come out of our trials in much the same way that we usually do, thanking Providence that it has been no worse.

The wisest of the sages tell us that things are not bad at all, and might be a thousand times worse than they are. They also tell us that the worst aspect of the situation is the apathy and indifference of those who ought to be enlisting or working in some other way to bring the war to an end. Sir George Paish has been pointing out that the great expenditures are not to be regarded as alarming. These expenditures would be all made anyway, but thru other channels than the government departments, had there been no war.

People must be fed. The soldiers are perhaps a little better fed than usual, but no one grudges them that. Everybody ought to be as well or better fed in peace than in war. This is a question of economics which will be heard of after the war is over. The men who have lived in the open and developed appetites are not going to work at desks and live on buns in the piping times of peace. At least the best of them won't.

At all events a great portion of the huge war votes must be put down to cost of food, which would have to be provided in any case. The only wasted money is what is fired off in explosives or spent in weapons. The clothing and shelter is like the food, and must be supplied anyway. The actual dead loss from the unproductiveness of the men engaged in fighting is the most serious financial problem to the empire. Nearly all the world is busy in the same way. Only the neutrals have a chance to make money from productive labor, and most of them are busy with war material also. The world, in other words, is all growing poor together, so that the difference will not be so marked as it otherwise would.

The pinch will really come upon the defeated combatants, and this is why Great Britain has made up her mind that she is not going to be defeated apart from all sentimental, moral and ethical considerations whatever. This is the only side of the question the Whatsoever may be thought about the war or the conduct of the war in England the cheerful way in which the government goes after the necessary funds ought to encourage all who have a similar responsibility on this side of the water. There was a time in the reputed history of Israel when gold and silver were not accounted of, but we feel assured that there never have been such financial burdens assumed with such good cheer and stout heart as the burdens of the great European war in England.

THE SURE SUN.

Copyright, 1918.

WHEN days are dark I do not chide the sun With coverings and carplings without end; But blame the clouds as I should blame the one Who tries to come between me and my friend.

I know the sun is there, and shines as true As if no mist had risen to obscure, And soon or late will burst upon my view Sure as the love of my true friend is sure.

DEPUTATION COMPLAINS AGAINST SQUATTERS

They Live in Tiny Township and Defy School and Tax Laws.

A deputation headed by Capt. J. I. Hart, M.L.A., for East Simcoe, waited on Hon. Mr. Hanna, provincial secretary, yesterday, requesting that a certain section of 700 acres in Tiny Township, at present crown lands, be brought under the control of the township council. According to the deputation as matters stand at present the squatters on the wooded land cannot be made to educate their children, or contribute in taxes to the development of the county.

The same deputation afterwards saw Hon. T. W. McGarry, provincial treasurer, and urged the adoption of the poll tax on single men and also a taxation on tenant as well as land lord. They received the usual promise of consideration from both ministers.

FORMER POLICEMAN WILL STAND HIS TRIAL

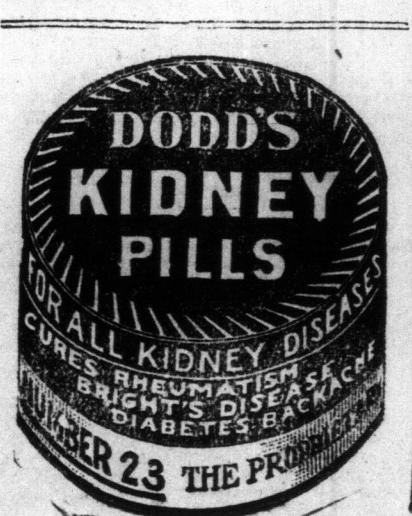

Thos. Delaney, Connected With Diamond Robbery, is Committed.

SANDBAGGING STORY EXPLODED BY POLICE

"I was sandbagged and robbed of $229," announced Leonard Shaw, a middle-aged man, when he came up before Col. Denison in the police court yesterday to answer a charge of vagrancy.

Pressed for details, Shaw alleged that the robbery had taken place some weeks ago outside Meagher's Hotel. He was instructed to tell his story to the detective department, which it failed to impress save as an excuse for getting out of court.
