First, the buried needle is magnetized by passing a magnet over the part of the body where it is suspected to be. Then another needle, suspended from a fine silk thread, is passed over the same locality. The poles of the buried needle will attract unlike poles of the surgeon's needle, causing the latter to swing around parallel to the axis of the buried needle, and if one pair of poles is nearer than the other, there will be a corresponding dip of the examining needle, somewhat like the way a "divining rod" behaves. By this means the buried needle may be locat ed with great accuracy. This provides a far simpler and readier means of locating a buried piece of steel than the use of X-Rays.
