How A Diver Dodged A Shark

There are all kinds of shark stories floating around the Pacific, but while most of them may be as unreliable as the nature of the fish itself, one that comes from the South Seas on the steamer Mariposa has all the appearance of being as true as it is thrilling.

Capt. Adams, while an American by birth, has lived in the South Seas for many years, and knows as much about pearl shell diving and other industries as the natives themselves.

A few weeks ago, while on the island of Apaki, in the Poroto group, he decided to go down after pearl shells, and was furnished by the native divers with one of their suits, consisting of a helmet and a rubber garment reaching only to the waist.

The air hose was connected with the diver at any depth by simply filling the lungs through the air hose and blowing the air into the waist, when the suit soars up over the head of the diver, while the man easily rises to the surface, like a swimmer after a long dive.

On this occasion, when at an estimated depth of 25 fathoms, and while standing beside a huge boulder, and coral growth many feet in diameter, he observed an immense body a short distance above him. It soon appeared to be moving, and to save himself from possible attack by a shark, Capt. Adams projected himself into a small indentation of the rock, but he could not get entirely in.

Advice to a Young Wife

Never disparage a man while reading the paper.

Never ask a fit man for anything while pulling on his boots.

Never speak to a man until he has had something good to eat.

When you want anything wait until your husband has had his breakfast, and then help him to it.

When you see a man smoothing his collar the right way, ask for it.

When he looks injured and plaintive examine his plate, there is sure to be a vacancy.

If he lies on the sofa after dinner and shakes the house with his snores, accuse him not of sleeping, for he is merely thinking with his eyes shut.

If he says he is going to the club for an hour, don't bid him adieu for the evening.

If he loses his handkerchiefs every where but at home let him have his own way about it—that the washerwoman is dishonest without your knowing it.

If you want him to do anything never tell him it is good for him, for he will not be "tied to a woman's apron strings."

Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F.,

Closing Proceedings.

ST. STEPHEN, Aug. 15.—Thursday afternoon Grand Lodge received and dealt with many reports from committees.

A most interesting report was presented from a special committee on Practical Philanthropy. This report dealt with the dreaded disease of consumption and its prevention and cure.

It was recommended that the incoming Grand Master, in conjunction with the retiring Grand Master, Dr. Walker, take such means as may be necessary to bring the subject before the respective lodges to the end that some scheme may be evolved for the presentation at the next annual meeting of the Grand Lodge by which the order may aid in furthering the movement for the prevention and cure of consumption.

The question of private yards in provincial or other hospitals for the benefit of Oddfellows was also discussed. No further action, however, was taken on the matter.

The installation of officers took place this evening. A. F. Fraser, New Glasgow, Grand Marshal; Charles Comblen, Grand Guardian; H. E. Colner, Grand Herald.

Speeches were made by grand officers and others. A social reunion was held during which refreshments were served.

Stabbed Companion; Threw Him Overboard

Labec, Me., Aug. 18.—A rather sensational stabbing affray, in which David Batron was probably fatally wounded by Fred Case during a quarrel in a sail boat, was witnessed by people on the shore of the bay here today.

Case and Batron, aged 30 and 20 years, respectively, were heard to be having some words, as the boat came in from a little cruise through the nature of the quarrel is unknown.

Case was seen to draw a large fishing knife and strike his companion a severe blow in the side. The man fell in agony, apparently unconscious, and near the shore Case was seen to throw the body overboard. Some of those who had seen the affair, rushed out and recovered Batron, whom they thought at first to be dead.

He was removed to his home with a deep knife wound in his breast.

Others who had seen the stabbing attempted to capture Case, but the latter got the sail boat under way quickly and headed for the New Brunswick shore.

Police officers immediately left on a ferry steamer and overtook Case of Eastport. He was brought back here and locked up on a charge of assault with intent to kill.

He will be arraigned tomorrow.

Batron's wound is quite serious in itself and the physician fears that blood poisoning will set in. He is a single man with his assistant is married and has three children. It is said that both men had been drinking.

Still Anxious About Crops in The West

WINNIPEG, Aug. 13.—Fearing in regard to the crop continues one of anxiety and unrest. The weather of the past week has not been favorable.

There were one or two days of hot weather with light winds, but these were followed by severe storms, with hail in many places, and it is not yet known how much damage will result.

Frequent showers are making straw grow and white heads are filling out more slowly than they should do at this season.

Days are shorter and nights cooler than in July, so a week now does not mean the same development that it did a month ago.

Crop news can not be regarded as anything but bullish until there is at least some chance of getting blisters to work, and the most sanguine, do not expect cutting in the Northwest before the 25th of this month and not much to be done before September first.

MARTIN CONE, CALAIS

CALAIS, Aug. 17.—Martin Cone, one of the best known turmen in this section of the state and proprietor of Cone's livery stable, died at noon on Thursday at his home on Washington street, death resulting from the inroads of a cancerous growth in the throat.

Mr. Cone has been falling in health for upwards of a year and during the past winter underwent a serious operation in a Boston hospital in hope of gaining relief from the malady which had fastened upon him but the respite was only temporary and it was realized by his family and friends that the end was approaching.

Mr. Cone was a veteran of the Civil war and was one of the best known turmen doing business on the St. Croix. He was upright and honorable in all his dealings and had a large circle of acquaintances throughout the state.

He is survived by a widow, son and daughter

The Collins Case

A correspondent of the Fredericton Herald writes from Albert:

The most celebrated occupant the jail has had for many years is Tom Collins, charged with the murder of Mary Ann McAuley of New Ireland, in August last. He has already had two trials and is to have another on the 17th of next month.

The people about here seem to get mad when spoken to about the Collins case. The judge, they say, is to blame for the failure of the first trial, and with one accord they lay the blame for the second upon the jury.

I asked a man yesterday what he thought would be the probable outcome of the third trial, and his reply was: "They may convict Collins, but he will never get the rope." "Notwithstanding the fact that the belief is almost universal here that Collins was the perpetrator of as cold blooded and cowardly a murder as the annals of crime in this province can show, there is a strong undercurrent of sympathy for him.

He has been well fed and cared for at the county jail, and has probably had the time of his life during the past year. Collins spends most of his time reading and drawing and has become quite an expert with the crayon. He has a stock of portion of sawdust. The margin, it is held, is ample for the maintenance of his life.

Moreover, the running water carrying away the emanations of the sawdust beds and banks works to purification, and makes the conditions in a stream different from those in an aquarium. Therefore, Professor Knight concludes, as in a general way he did in his report of 1902, that no stream can be hand be declared to be poisoned by sawdust, but each case must be studied by itself and its conditions understood before coming to a judgment.

He adds that no stream he has yet studied in books and magazines in his cell that would fill an ordinary dry goods box, and he says he has read them all. He is always ready to talk about his case, and seems confident that in the end he will be acquitted. Collins is nothing more than a brat of a boy, rather small in stature, and he certainly has an innocent look. He takes things remarkably cool for one in his position, and is either a clever actor, or a moral degenerate, with the odds in favor of the latter.

Mark Twain raves over the two most delightful things in England--the women and strawberries.

He says the former are the most beautiful he has ever seen, and he has invited them all to his funeral.

It will be the greatest gathering of beauty and magnificence the world has ever seen.

As to the strawberries, they are both spectacular and refreshing, and a fit complement to the beautiful English women.

Yes, it is quite time ofr Mark to come home.
